Character.

There is nothing that weighs more heavily upon a right minded man that the slow progress he makes in overcoming his faults. Here we are at twenty with the faults of childhood upon us; peevish, ungovernable, insatiable; at thirty with the faults of youth; vain, inconsiderate, pleasure-loving; at firty still wearing the badges of early folly; proud, passionate, sensual; at fifty or sixty, not yet wise with the experience of life; selfish still, unsympathetic, ambitious, full of conscious weakness and perhaps, with an ill-repressed brood of evil habits and the characteristic vice of age avarice. Yet all the while we may have been striving after the good, ourbing the evil, keeping our faces heavenward; all the while aiming to fear God and keep His commandments; never at any time wholly giving up the strife after ideal excellence. This, after all, is the tragical feature of life; that it is linked with so much failure in character: that it is given for wisdom, and yet we are not wise; for goodness, and we are not good; for overcoming evil, and evil remains; for patience and sympathy and self-command and love, and yet we are fretful and hard and weak and selfish This makes the bitterness of death and calls out the cry: Vanity of vanities; all is vanity! It is the struggle and not the attainment, that measures character and foreshadows destiny. Character is not determined by faults and weaknesses DeJones .- Pastor-Oh, yes.
