WOODROW.

A POSSIBLE ROMANCE WHICH A NEWS AND OBSERVER MAN FOUND IN WINSTON. Correspondence News and Observer. WINSTON, N. C., May 24th. Some days ago I found myself, after visiting all the towns of such importance on the recently constructed part of the C. & F. & Y. V. R. R., resting my weary head at the Fountain Hotel in Winston, N. C. At this place I met with one of North Carolina's most original characters, and I will endeavor to give your readers a short and brief account of the wit which is daily furnishing his friends and townsmen. Not long since the above mentioned character, who is one of the most prominent and popular manufacturers of that section, through the agency of a matrimonial bureau of Chicago, was put in correspondence with a bouncing young country widow of northern Illinois. They exchanged photos and a lengthy correspondence ensued as to the merits and general desirability of the two candidates for matrimony. The gray young widow seemed highly pleased with the material resources of the Winston manufacturer, and he in turn made diligent inquiry as to the amount of plunder she could call her own. She wrote him that she had a small tract of land of about forty acres, a cow, wagon and harness, and three or four hogs and a sheep and household goods and agricultural implements. He wrote if she would get up another male, he believed he would take her, and in response to her inquiries as to his physical proportions, he stated that he was six feet tall and weighed one hundred and eighty five pounds, and had dark hair and blue eyes and that he was universally regarded as the handsomest man in the State. The sequel is yet to ensue, but those who are in the secret of these amatory negotiations confidently anticipate that one of Winston's chronic bachelors will at some distant day in the future be basking in the Elysian fields of conjugal bliss.

CONGRESS. PROCEEDINGS YESTERDAY IN THE HOUSE.

By Telegram to the News and Observer. WASHINGTON, D. C., May 26th.—At the suggestion of Mr. Matson, of Indiana, the consideration of various private pension bills which came over from last night's session, with the previous question ordered, was postponed until June 20th. Mr. Matson remarking that on that day the House would be in a state of truce. The House then went into committee of the whole (Mr. Blount, of Georgia, in the chair) on the legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill. The pending amendment offered by Mr. McComas, of Maryland, increasing the clerical force of the civil service commission, was advocated by Mr. Tracy of New York. "Mr. Whitthorne, of Tennessee, opposed the amendment. He was glad that he had voted against the civil service law. He had believed that it was anti-Republican and anti-Democratic in its tendencies. He believed that it would grow to be a sore on the body politic, full of mischief and danger to the theory on which the government was founded. Standing as he did as one of the complainants against the administration for not turning Republicans out and putting Democrats in, he had reason to admire the faithfulness of the President to the pledges made in his letter as to his course in the execution of what would be the law of the land. He knew in his own personal experience that when he had applied to the President for the removal of officials because they were Republicans, the President had stood immovable. In his own State of Tennessee there had not been one single removal of a Presidential appointee; the President had waited until the officials' terms had expired. Mr. Hopkins, of Illinois—Was any charge of inefficiency brought against any of them? Mr. Whitthorne—I take it for granted the inefficiency is the Republicanism of the officeholder. [Laughter and applause.] I am perfectly frank, for I believe that at the ballot-box the people of the United States are firm and there they preserved the character of our institutions and any body, civil service commission or not, that stands between them and their judgment, is working contrary to the theory of our institutions. [Applause on Democratic side.] After some further debate the amendment was agreed to, yeas 81, nays 71. The amendment provides for one additional clerk of class 3, one of class 2, and one at $1,000, and increases the appropriations for necessary traveling expenses from $4,000 to $5,000. The committee then rose. The House at 10:05 adjourned and the Republican members at once went into caucus.
