OF WIVES AND HIS DOG.
I was wholly indescribable, and from beneath my gray hairs were visible. Her entire dress was quiet and unlike anything I had seen. I could hardly keep my eyes off her. She, as well as the man, glanced eagerly at my pack as I hid it down. The latter was a coarse looking person, whose countenance appeared more indicative of apathy than villainy.

When I reached the summit of the hill, I saw a woman sitting on a rock, looking towards the water. She was dressed in a simple, but elegant manner. Her face was pale and her eyes were deep-set. She looked at me with a steady gaze, and I felt as if I were being scrutinized.

The dog, who had been with me all the way, came up to me and wagged its tail. I petted it and it licked my hand. The woman on the rock looked on with interest.

The woman on the rock looked at me with interest. She seemed to be waiting for something to happen. I felt a strange sense of uneasiness as I looked at her.

I was undressing, I put my pistol under my pillow and laid down; but such an uncomfortable and terrible sense of oppression upon me, that I could not think of sleeping. Lion, too, appeared uneasy—came and put his fore paws upon the bed every few minutes, then went back to his post by the door, and hid down in a kind of feverish anxiety.

As I lay in bed, I thought of the woman on the rock. She had a strange, almost supernatural look about her. I wondered what she was doing there.
