When Brigham heard of it, he made a speech to his people, in which he told them what President Plarce intended, and what he himself intended—and sanding a new Governor, and the other intending to repulse the compliment. It was in that speech he said to his people that he intended to remain is his place until the Lord should say to him, "Brigham, I don't want you to he Governor of Utah any longer." Governor of Utah any longer."

The administration was afraid of him, and undertook to out-managuvre him, and that in the highest style of West Point tactics; they detertained to smuggle Steptoe in. For that purpose the millitary Governor was furnished with a battalion of soldiers, and directed to proceed to the Mormon kingdom, as if he was going to California, stop there to hybernate, and watching the chance, slip into the governorship some day when Brigham was out-something like a weared post facto predictions,) that the next time we should bear of this Gov. Steptoe again, he would be on his up-toes, marching to the tune of " Hey, Betty Martin, tip-toe fine;" and so it was; for before the hybernation was over he was on hismarch in good truth to California, to return thence to the United States. But there was something else which I did not foresee, which was, that this military governor carried off four dozen of the Marmon Betty Martins with him, to the infinite-distress of the mints, profoundly chagrined to find themselves so encroached upon by the Gentales. But it was the last encroachment of the kind. No more of the United States military have been there since, and Brighum says he has promised the Lord that if they come again he will fix them so that they will let his Betty Martins alone. And that was the end of the attempt by this administration to give a Governor to Utah Brigham holds on to the place, and Mr. Pierce stands with hands off, and the scandalous spectaele is seen of a man assuming to be Governor by the will of the Lord, repulsing the United States authorities, trampling the laws under foot, insulting and defying the Federal Government, and no attempt made to reduce him to law and order Such is the insurgent condition of the polyga
