NATURE.

An old lady came up to the office Wednesday. She was worp and tired from clining the winding stairs, and she sank almost breathless into the waste basket, putting the poems and stories it contained to the only press they will ever know. There was a troubled anxious look on her face, a pair of green spectacles on her nose, and a general air of sorrow and exhaustion about her that appealed at once to our tenderest feelings. The feelings answered the appeal and stepped respectfully for day ward. After the aged female had recovered her breath, she asked :

"Is there a luryer's office in this buil-
