The Evening Post.

WILMINGTON, N. C.

Tuesday. September 23d, 1873.

In another column appears a copy of a call now being circulated among the Doctors, which we publish by request. We know nothing about it, except that the President and Secretary and sell the call is very heartily endorsed by their bonds, and rely on their action of some of our leading physicians, which | yesterday in uniting for common proin itself is enough to cause the profession to read the call very carefully, and consider it favorably.

Now that the excitement is dying down in New York, we hope our banks will forego their overcautiousness, and help to lift off the pressure. Our products are about ready to move, and dealers must have money. We will suf fer terribly here unless parties of known ability can get accommodations as they need them during the next thirty days.

THE Raleigh News publishes the fol lowing in its editorial column:

The bank panic in New York and other Northern cities has not yet reached the South, but it will surely do so unless the Government shall intervene. And again, in the same column, it says: Unless the Government comes to the universal depression in the money market, and every interest will feel the

From this we should judge that the News was in favor of Government interference. If this be so, it has changed its song materially since it supported Mr. Greeley. The Philosopher was down on this sort of a thing.

Waked Up.

Our friend, the Fayetteville Statesman, again makes its appearance, with O. H. Blocker as editor. We welcome brother Blocker into the treadmill, while we sympathize with him. Hereafter he be difficult for him ever to keep away from it, but he will do a good work in his vicinity. We hope to notice a pros- The offers for sale were limited, and perous season on the part of the Statesman. We make the following extract from brother Blocker's salutatory:

"Without experience in the newspaper business, with little taste and less our patrons, and make an awkward bow. We shall devote our best energies to the paper, and while we have no plus governments were tied up on Thursday and Friday, and consequently were not available on Saturday. The action hope of conducting it with that acknowledged ability which characterized the Statesman under its former talented editor, we do hope our friends will assist us in rendering it a sprightly and readable paper.

" Unflinchingly Republican, and devoted to the interest of the Great Union Republican Party, the Statesman will not be unmindful that others too have rights in their opinions when honestly formed. Our opponents will meet with due respect and courtesy so long as they will it.

"With good feeling for all, and with the hope that some good may be accomplished for the whole people, we hoist our bantling to the breeze."

The Panic.

The President was in New York Sunday, and held conferences with the Secretary of the Treasury and many leading capitalists of the country. The following is from the special dispatches to the Washington Republican:

up from Long Branch, was quartered at the Fifth Avenue, and was joined by Secretaries Richardson & Robeson this morning. He spent the whole day in giving audience to the men prominent in the business and money interests of the city, and heard them all, from the stock speculators like Jay Gould, Henry Smith, Vanderbilt and Schell, to such eminent bankers and merchants as Vermilye, Drexel, Morton, Clews, Claflin and Morgan. All sorts of propositions were submitted, and it seemed impossible to secure a concert of action between bankers and merchants. The merchants seemed inclined to the opinion that the Government should not interfere, but let the thing work out itself; that it was merely the downfall of a pernicious system of gambling that had grown to be chronic with financial men, and the sooner it was broken up the better. Jay Gould was of the opinion that nothing could be done by Government interference. No matter what Secretary Richardson might do, he would wager to-morrow-should there be a general run on the banks-that every institution in the city would have thought differently. He urged the President to have the Government come to the immediate relief of the banks, and then in a few days everything would be on a safe and sound basis. The result was that the President ordered Secretary Richardson to have Assistant Treasurer Hillhouse begin tomorrow and buy bonds to the amount of forty million dollars. When this action of the President became known, a meeting of the bank presidents was held for the purpose of seeing if anything further could be done on their part to help stay the tide, but nothing was accomplished, and the opinion seemed conclusive that they could do nothing further than to accept the decision of tection. A meeting of presidents of savings banks was also held, and they resolved that rather than sacrifice their Government bonds by selling them to the Secretary of the Treasury at par, they would take advantage of the clause in their charters giving them thirty days in which to meet the demands of depositors. It is understood that Assistant Secretary Hillhouse interprets his instructions to allow banks to use a portion of their reserve, which will not necessitate the sacrifice of the bond securities.

The Washington Republican also publishes a special correspondance from New York, from which we make the following extracts:

THE PRODUCE AND COTTON EXCHANGE. At the Produce and Cotton Exchanges no excitement was visible, a fact an intrepid American, standing alone rescue of the banks, a general suspen- which proves that the influence of the sion is anticipated. This will produce crash is confined to speculators in railroad stocks and the class of moneyed men dependent upon or connected with them. The bursting of a few bubbles on Wall street does not materially interfere with the law of supply and demand, but when the bursting of those bubbles brings in its train the suspension of banks in which produce operators keep their accounts, the most serious crippling of the agricultural interests of the country may follow.

THE PURCHASE OF BONDS. The interference by the Treasury Department in the purchase of bonds Saturday did not produce the anticipated result. It was expected here that the moral effect of the order directing Mr. Hillhouse to make the purchase would will be an "ink slinger." Having got be to restore confidence; and when it the printer's ink upon his hand, it will became known that the Treasury balance showed a surplus of greenbacks of over $14,000,000 it was considered certain that the market would be eased .much below the amount anticipated. The reason for this is said to be an unwillingness to part with governments by holders at this time, and the further fact that most of the brokers who held governments had already pledged them talent for writing, we beg indulgence of for the wherewithal to meet their stock transactions. In other words, the surof the Treasury Department was, therefore, too late to produce the desired

The Flag of England

On the 12th of April 1606, the Union Jack-the flag that has waved in so many bloody and victorious battles by sea and shore-first made its appearance. From Rymer's "Fordera," and the Annals of Sir James Balfour, Lord Lyon King of Arms, we learn that some differences having arisen between ships of the two countries at sea, his Majesty ordained that a new flag be adopted, with the crosses of St. Andrew and St. George interlaced, by placing the latter fimbriated on the blue flag of Scotland as the ground thereof. This flag all ships were to carry at their main-top; but English ships were to display St. George's red cross at their sterns, and the Scottish, the white saltire of S. Audrew. The Union Jack, however, was not adopted by the troops of either country till their Parliamentary union in 1707. In Munro's account of the expedition with Mackay's regiment in Denmark, he states that in 1626 the Scots in the Danish army persisted in carry-ing their national flag, and refused to place the Danish cross upon it.-[From British Battles on Land and Sea," by to suspend. The ice was soft all the way, and a stronger vessel could have attained much higher latitude. The London Observer closes an eulogy on the late Captain Hall as follows: "A rude wooden monument to in the polar solitude, is at the same time a grand memorial trophy and chal-
