REMOVAL.
 THE subscribers having removed their Saddlery Shop to the building west of Thos. Clancy & Co. they take this method of informing their friends and customers that they are prepared to supply them with all articles in their line as cheap as can be bought in the state, and they venture to say, if not superior, at least as good as can be had any where. Their work has hitherto proved good, and having the best of workmen and northern materials, they feel assured that they can give general satisfaction to all who may call upon them for work.

THE PRESIDENCY.

THOSE friendly to the election of General ANDREW JACKSON, in the upper part of Orange, are requested to meet at Jas. Johnston's, in the Hawfields, on the first Saturday in October. The friends of that inestimable man who belong to no party but that of the REPUBLIC, are earnestly requested to attend said meeting. We wish for numbers, that we may have a full expression of opinion. We wish for harmony and zeal, in the great cause of "one and indivisible," in the great cause of "rewarding public virtue, with the highest gift in the power of a free people to bestow."
 The four following militia companies are requested by their respective Captains, to meet at the above place, at 12 o'clock on said day, for military exercise, viz: Captain Jones's, Captain Mebane's, Captain Thompson's, and Captain Cuck's.

From the Frederick (Md) Citizen, Sept. 3. AN ACCOMPLISHED VILLAIN.

In the month of September last, a man calling himself Charles J. Haderman, applied to the trustees of the Academy in this place for employment in the mathematical department of that institution, which was vacant. His address was such as to interest those to whom he applied, and, after producing certain testimonials, he was employed. As might be expected, from the known hospitality and unreserved cordiality of the people of Frederick, he was soon taken by the hand, and treated with the utmost attention. Whether it was the fascinating ease and gracefulness of his manners, the winning elegance of his colloquial powers, the profundness of his learning, or the discovery of some peculiar characteristics, that secured for him what many now determine a more than ordinary degree of attention, we are unable to say. But certain it is, he ingratiated himself into the best society and won the confidence of some of our most respectable citizens. In the course of the ensuing winter, he became violently enamored with a respectable young lady, the permission of whose friends he solicited to address her. They objected on account of his being a stranger of whom they knew nothing, and urged him to postpone his intentions until he should receive certain credentials, which he pretended to be in daily expectation of, to establish fully his claims to confidence. He treated their suggestions with the utmost respect, affecting to be fully impressed with their propriety; but, upon a most nefarious design, he prevailed upon the young lady to visit her relatives in Baltimore, whether he afterwards repented, and they were married in June last. A few days after their return to Frederick, and a lapse of five weeks, he determined to pay a visit to his friend (as he pretended,) who he expected held considerable funds in possession for him. He accordingly packed up all his clothes, of which he had procured a most abundant supply, and after borrowing considerable sums from various gentlemen into whose favor he had insinuated himself, he took passage in the stage for Philadelphia.

As he contemplated being absent but a few days, that time had no sooner elapsed than the friends of the young lady entertained apprehensions that he would not return; but just as such fears began to take root, they were dissipated by the receipt of a letter from the arch villain to the unfortunate and deluded victim of his treachery, dated at Albany, in which he stated that not accomplishing his business at Philadelphia, he had gone to New York, and that the German Consul had informed him his (Haderman's) kinsman, Baron Levenhaff, had just arrived and was in search of him—that the Baron's health having been impaired by a protracted sea voyage, he had gone to Saratoga to recruit himself, and that he (Haderman) was about to repair there in pursuit of him. He concluded by saying that in eight days he would return, with all that was necessary to make their condition in life easy and affluent. He enclosed a letter to the trustees of the Academy, resigning his situation as teacher, which circumstance served to establish his independence of such means of support. His return was then anxiously looked for, but weeks have elapsed, and to this period nothing has been heard from him; and the reluctant truth fixes itself upon all, even upon the innocent and too confiding victim of his infernal arts, that he has acted the part of a base and designing villain.

Haderman is about 5 feet 10 inches in height, well proportioned and muscular; he appears to be about 35 or 40 years of age; light complexion; light eyes, large irregular teeth, and thin sandy hair, somewhat curly. He is a German, but completely a Frenchman in manners, speaks French fluently in his own language, and the English very unintelligibly to those unaccustomed to hear him.

A case of an attempt at suicide occurred in this city yesterday morning, which illustrates the great uncertainty of all human calculations, and the versatility of the human mind. A man who had determined that he would not endure the whips and stings of fortune, and beheld himself languished with bearing fardels, undertook to make his quietus, not with a bare bodkin, but with a penknife. Not happening to make the incision deep enough, and perhaps also, by a sort of prudential instinct, availing the jugular, he succeeded only in producing an ugly gash, which, though it alarmed his friends at first, was quietly sewed up by the doctor, to the great relief of the penitent plotter of self murder. He asserts that he had no idea that it would smart so, or he should have let fortune do her worst ere he had attempted a remedy so exceeding summery. He is likely to do well now, that is to say, so far as relates to bodily integrity, and it is to be hoped that he will not again cause the doctor and his friends unnecessary trouble and expence.

SOUTH AMERICA.

The republic of the south, no longer threatened with an external foe, seem determined to prey upon each other. Buenos Ayres has for some time been engaged in a war with the government of Brazil, and now Colombia and Peru are about to unshackle the word. When united against their common enemy, these nations exhibited a praiseworthy patriotism, and apparently a sincere love for liberty. The jarring elements of their mixed population and internal interests, were forgotten while danger was pressing them round about. But since they gained their independence, there has been an almost continued series of broils and commotions among themselves. These internal dissensions are much to be lamented, and serve to remind us how much gratitude we owe those patriots and statesmen, who, after our own revolutionary war had been vicariously terminated, secured by the greatest exertions, the prize which had thus been gained: by the formation of our present constitution. This, it is well known, was no easy task. The enlightened people of that day, however, properly appreciating the value of free institutions, were induced to make the necessary compromises to attain the glorious end for which the blood and treasure of the nation had been expended. We trust the people of South America may in the end be equally fortunate.

There appears to be various opinions with regard to the real character of Bolivar. By some he is believed to be a true patriot, and that the fearful anarchy with which he is vested, is rather a necessary evil, than otherwise, by the unsettled state of the South American nations. Others entertain the opinion, that he is insincere in his professions, and that his sole object is to usurp unlimited sovereignty.

NEW PROCESS FOR CLEANING LINEN.

The Society for the Management of the Arts and Manufactures have rewarded Mrs. Morris for a method of cleaning silk, woolen, and cotton goods, without injury to the texture or color.
 Take raw potatoes, and let them be well washed, and rubbed on a grater, over a vessel of clean water to a fine pulp. Pass the liquid water through a coarse sieve into another tub of clean water; let the mixture stand till the fine white particles of the potatoes are precipitated; then pour the mucilaginous liquor from the tucula, and preserve the liquor for use. The article to be cleaned should then be laid upon a linen cloth on a table and sponged repeatedly with the potato liquor till the dirt is perfectly separated. The article should then be washed several times in clean water, to remove the loose dirt, and may be afterwards smoothed and dried. The coarse pulp which does not pass the sieve is asserted to be of great use in cleaning worsted curtains, tapestry, and other coarse goods. The mucilaginous liquor of the potatoes will clean silk, cotton, or woolen goods of any kind, without damaging the texture of the article, or affecting the color. It is further applicable to the removal of dirt from oil painting or soiled furniture; and dirty painted wainscots may be cleaned by wetting a sponge in the liquor, then dipping it in a little fine clean sand, and rubbing the wainscot.

A public writer says: "Happiness depends on morals—and industry on honorable industry—and industry on the certainty of favorable results. It should be the main business of government to secure these results, in order to have moral and happy subjects."
