RURAL ECONOMY. "And your rich soil, Exuberant, nature's better blessings pour O'er every land."

From the American Farmer. HAY. Of the manner of preserving without alteration, the savour, color, and fragrance of hay, and all the nutritious principles it may possess.

Place in your meadow, or rather farmyard, a long pole perpendicular, to which attach bunches of thorns or branches; put on the ground a thick layer of these thorns or boughs, and from a circular base in proportion to the hay to be cured; take good fresh straw, and spread it some inches thick on these laggots; over this put a bed of green hay of nearly the same thickness, then a layer of straw, and so alternately in the same proportions to the top, which cover with stubble, leaving an opening to the pile of thorn bushes, or boughs; this straw and these boughs, allowing the free circulation of the air, will prevent the hay from heating, and the straw will absorb the precious aroma of the grass, with such facility and advantage, that the beasts of all kinds will devour it with as much avidity as the best hay.

By this means great advantages will be gained and inconveniences avoided, particularly in curing artificial grasses.

If the weather is uncertain and you fear that the rain will white or even rot the hay, cut it and carry it to immediately; and, provided it be freed from the superabundant water, it may, by the process just mentioned, preserve its fine green, aroma, and savour, and communicate also to the straw with which it is mixed its precious qualities. Thus augmented, at the same time, the quantity and quality of forage; and it is exposed to the rust, or to be lost by putrid fermentation; it preserves all the year that fine green and agreeable aroma, which distinguishes it when it comes from the meadows in the driest and most beautiful weather.

Prolific Season.—An Eastern (Md.) paper of the 19th ult. says: "A stalk of corn has been presented to us, and is now to be seen in this office, from the farm of Capt. Richard Tappan, of Bayley's Neck, in this county, which has nine distinct and good ears of corn on it. It has excited the attention and admiration of the agriculturists who have called to see it, and we learn it is the result of the care of many years in selecting the most productive corn in the field as seed corn."

Muslin.—Mr. Faulkner, a weaver from Scotland, has introduced, at Pawtucket, the weaving of figured Muslins, by power looms, whereas it is done in Europe, exclusively by hand looms. The figures can be changed at pleasure—and any lady can have any pattern she may order. Mr. F. says the goods can be made as cheap as in Europe, and conceives they may be afforded as low as shirtings. The looms are not costly, are free for inspection, and he is willing to furnish them to manufacturers for a small compensation. The same principles, as in these looms, can be applied to scarf and fancy weaving.

M. Levasseur's account of General La Fayette's tour in the United States, which has been published in Paris, consists of two volumes, octavo, embellished with eleven engravings.
