CURING BEEF.

SIR:—As the season has arrived that Beef (fresh) comes into use necessarily as well as agreeably, I beg leave to suggest to your numerous readers, something in relation to the management of it that may not be known to all. It is the result of experience for years, and being calculated to add to domestic economy and comfort, I communicate the information with confidence and pleasure. That the curing of beef is attended with much difficulty in the South, is known to all house-keepers who endeavor to live well, as also that nicely cured Northern beef is a luxury. Bacon and greens is a much valued southern dish, rendered so, I am afraid, by the ease with which our good old matrons prepare it. No physician will attempt to say, as a medical man, that a constant use, such as we frequently find, during those months of the year predisposing to fever, is salutary. Yet with thousands in the south, custom has consecrated the use of it as often in the day as an old lady of my acquaintance drinks her coffee, viz. three times a day, and uniformly previous to saying her prayers, to keep her from being "heavy headed." To any taste uncorrupted by wicked habits, the "corned beef and cabbage" of the north will be found a most agreeable change.
Beef when elegantly handled and corned, in about two months acquires a peculiar flavor and taste which may be readily recognized in the half barrel Boston beef put up for family use, and which frequently comes to our market. This flavor and taste, by those who are at all fond of this meat, adds much to its value. When used cold, as a rasher, it certainly is highly grateful to the palate. And I can say from repeated trials, that well corned beef for the first month, especially sliced when cold, and slightly fried in sweet lard, will be found no mean substitute for fried ham. As a change, I view it highly agreeable.
To be able to save the whole of a beef during the summer, is really desirable, and to give it all the qualities of the fine northern half barrel beef before alluded to, I have found equally so; and which can be done as follows:
Kill your animal in the evening, if possible, alter a rainy day. Have tubs filled with the coolest and clearest water you can procure. Cut up as fast as possible and throw the pieces into the water, stirring them through and through the water to detach the blood as much as possible, which will require about ten minutes. Take out and pile on a table, inclined, so as to throw off the water that oozes from the meat. As soon as the tubs can be re-filled with clear water, throw the meat back, continuing the straining process for ten or fifteen minutes more, by which time the meat will assume a white appearance. For the purpose of expedition, have two of the largest Dutch ovens you can procure, (small ones or pots will do,) and fill them half full of the best York's Island or Exuma Salt (no ground alum adulterated with Liverpool,) heat as fine as possible in a mortar. When the salt is as hot (heated over good live coals) as the hand can bear, rub the meat well, putting on it as you pack it down, in half barrel tubs, a sprinkling of Saltpetre. If you can afford it, sprinkle it with brown sugar or molasses at the same time. By judiciously mixing in your tub the bony and flesh pieces, you may have it so compactly packed that the air will be excluded, which is a most material point at this time. After filling your tubs, cover with any coarse cloth best calculated to exclude the atmosphere, and place them in the coolest depository you can find on the ground. On the following day have a scaffold erected as high as possible. Mine I erected at the end of my smoke house, about twenty feet high, and for one dollar expense, and has already served me five years. Lay small cross pieces as you would prepare a scaffold for jenkins—and rightly called, for heaven knows it jerks the human stomach in the process of digestion.) About dark the next evening, take your beef from the tubs, as it lays, and disturbing it as little as possible to throw off the salt, place it on the scaffold. By day break take it down and replace it in the tubs, sprinkling a little additional salt, recollecting most especially not to let any fears get hold of you that the meat will be made "too salt." Repeat the scaffolding the second and third nights. On the night of the last scaffolding, take the brine from your tubs, and boil it until perfectly clear. Wash your tubs perfectly clean, and pack well down. Put on your brine cold, and add as much made strong enough to bear an egg, until your meat is covered; and tie on your covering the best calculated you can to exclude the atmosphere. In using, prudence will say to you to use the bony pieces first, and at the end of the month to reboil and skim your pickle, and replace it so always to keep the meat covered with it. You will find after well rubbing the meat, it will swell and become perfectly red.

Thereafter a month or two, if you can make good heads of Early York or other cabbage, boil one or two heads, with a fat piece of your beef, leaving old Ned for a change; and my teeth for it, you'll find you have a most excellent substitute, nay more, a dish far superior.
While, sir, I have no idea of "living to eat," I find it absolutely necessary to "eat to live," and consequently view it as proper to make the business as agreeable as possible, governed always by prudence and temperance.
Do not have any fears about putting on too much sugar or molasses.
PLANTER.

People in general turn a horse's head to a bright light to examine his eyes. You can know very little by this method, what sort of an eye a horse has, unless it be a very defective one. You must examine the eye first when the horse stands with his head to the manger. Look carefully at the pupil of the eye in a horse; it is of an oblong form; carry the size of a pupil in your mind, and then turn the horse about, bring him to a light; if the pupil of the eye contracts, appears much smaller than it was in the dark light, then you may be sure the horse has a strong good eye; but provided the pupil remains nearly the same size as it appeared in the darker light, then the horse has a weak eye, therefore have nothing to do with him. There are contracting and dilating muscles in the eye which will plainly show you in what state the eye is, whether it be a strong or a weak one.

Continental.—The number of regulars furnished to the Revolutionary Army were—
By New England, 117,411
By the Middle States, 56,571
By the Southern States, 56,397
It appears by the above, that New England, consisting of New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut, furnished more troops for the defence of her country than the other nine states by 3872.

The number of troops furnished by South Carolina was 6447; by Massachusetts, 07,907; Georgia, 2697; Connecticut, 31,939! New England lost more men in defending South Carolina against her Tory citizens, than South Carolina raised during the whole war. Ft. Rep.

An Alarming Sight.—Last Friday week, a farmer from the neighborhood of Galston took his wife to see the wonders of the microscope now exhibiting in our town. The variety of curiosities seemed to please the good woman very well, till the animalculæ professed to be contained in a drop came to be shown not so very pleasant a sight as the others; she sat patiently, however, till the "water tigers," magnified to the size of twelve feet, appeared on the sheet, fighting with usual ferocity. Janet now rose with great trepidation, and cried to her husband, "For gude sake come aw a' John." "Sit still, woman," said John, "and see the show." "See the show! gude keep us a' man, what will come o' us if the awfu' like brutes would break out o' the water."
London paper.

A writer in the New York Farmer estimates the number of dogs in the United States to be 1,300,000, and the expense of keeping them to be upwards of ten millions of dollars annually.

In the reign of Henry VIII it is affirmed that no fewer than 72,000 criminals were hanged. Sir Thomas More describes them as strung up by scores upon gibbets all over the country. Even in the golden days of Queen Bess, the executions were from three to four hundred annually.

Coal Mine in Connecticut.—We learn that a coal mine has recently been discovered in the mountain near the village of Sandy Hook, in Newton, which is believed to be inexhaustible. It is similar to the Lehigh coal, and good judges pronounce it fully equal to that article.

The gratification of desire is sometimes the worst thing that can befall us.
