T. R. GARY, R. O. EPES,

Late of Richmond, Late of Petersburg. NEW CROCKERY HOUSE! To the Trade of Virginia & North Carolina.

We have opened in Norfolk on Main Street, opposite the Post Office, the largest and most complete stock of China, Crockery Silver Plated Ware, Glass Ware and House Furnishing Goods

It has ever been the pleasure of any one to offer to the Trade. Our stock is of OUR OWN IMPORTATION and bought of the Manufacturers direct on a dull and depressed market, which enables us to sell to the Trade at much lower figures than they have had offered to them since the war. OUR STOCK IS COMPLETE. and one need not go farther than call on us and find a complete assortment such as is usually kept by first class wholesale and retail crockery, china and glass ware houses. Respectfully,
THOMAS R. GARY & CO Main street, opposite Post-office, Norfolk, Sept. 15. 34-3m

RECOLLECTIONS OF A LAZY LIFE.

(Concluded.)
"Two beats with but a single head,
Two cabbages with one."

Around us the frolicsome June bug gayly waltzed and the cheerful hum of the mosquito added pathos to the scene, while in the adjacent mill-pond the guileless bull-frog performed a select anthem to the parting day. Afar off in the western horizon the sun was setting which he did in his usual hunky style, without bursting any button off his trousers. Nothing disturbed the solemn stillness but the gentle heaving of her bosom, and the gentle heaving of a small boy who was smoking a cheroot in the woodshed. I was trying to imagine, with the pure affection of youth, how many stamps she had laid away, as she was engaged in heaving an elegant assortment of signs, varying from a small to a large size. The ecstatic rapture which steeped my soul in bliss o'rcame me, and, seizing Matilda by her waterfall, I imprinted the pure kiss of betrothal behind her left ear.

She gazed at me in silent rapture, and, while the lovelight gleamed with dewy softness from those liquid orbs upraised to mine, he said:
"Skinner, have you taken a bath lately?"

She continued: "You are an old fool. If you ain't got spunk enough to bring this bile to a head, I have. Come set the day, my ethereal blood, my festive, bald-headed winikin."

Thus with honeyed words of love, did we beguile the time.

We were married in church, my children as chief mourners occupying front seats. There were no cards, except a game of euchre, to see who should sleep in the front of the bed. We took a short bridal tour; she went to see her Aunt Abigail, and I came to Boston to buy a new set of type for the Trombone. It was the time that all was so quiet on the Potomac; but that day Boston was in a fever of excitement, because it was hinted in official circles that the commanding general would move as soon as his rent became due, though he hated to leave Mason and Dixon's line. It was so hot that he hang the clothes on washing days.

My second venture in the sea of matrimony has not been a success. Metaphorically speaking, my second plate of matrimonial hash has soured on my hands. On returning to my domicile in Slunkville, my wife addressed me in the following chaste language:

"Skinner, I am now boss of this shebang, and really hope, for your mother's sake, that I shan't be obliged to use the mop-handle over your head more than twice a day, and once Sundays."

Another eccentricity of hers is planting her feet in the small of my back after I have retired for the night, and whirling me playfully across the room. The first overtone of this kind occurred one very cold morning, when I suggested the propriety of her getting up and building the fire. If my memory serves me right, and I think she do, I built the fire myself that A. M., and I have made it a point to do so ever since. If there is anything I doat on, it is rising with the lark and building the fire.

EMINENT AMERICAN SWEABISTS.

[Correspondent of the St. Louis Times.]

One evening last summer two men went aboard a Hudson river boat, bound for Albany. The first was a tall man, with gray hair, but vigorous for his age, the second was nearly as tall, but stouter, and also gray, and his peculiar slouching walk attracted a good deal of notice. The boat cast off and proceeded up the river, while most of the passengers sat on the upper deck, enjoying the cool air and admiring the beautiful scenery of the Hudson.

Presently a loud voice, pouring out a torrent of expletives, was heard on the deck below. One of the boat hands had let something heavy fall on the toes of the tall, thin man, and he opened on that unfortunate menial. He cursed him to Jericho, and Halifax, and Jerusalem, and a place a good deal warmer than either, and called him more names than he could repeat in a week, and made the polysyllable oaths fly about so fast that the poor deck hand was completely demoralized and obliged to retreat in wild confusion from the scene. At the same moment a man who had been leaning over one of the side rails began to swear. It was the same man that had gone aboard after the tall, thin one. He had taken off his hat, and was leaning over the rail in contemplative attitude and mood when the one on the upper deck dropped about a table-spoonful of tobacco spittle on his head. That started him. He shook his fists and stamped, and uttered volley after volley of rousing oaths, and startled the whole boat with his fury. The passengers were ready to acknowledge his superiority to the other man, when the deck had turned up again.

Then the man resumed operations. He damned that deck hand all over this world, and the lower part of the other one, and kept at it until the deck hand retreated again. In the meantime the man who had broken out about the tobacco spittle had subsided, and when quiet was restored, another deck hand asked one of the passengers who "them two fellers" were.

"One is Commodore Vanderbilt, and the other is Horace Greely."

"Well, I've bin along this 'ere river thirty year, and I've knowed fellers that could do pretty tall swearin', but I'm d—d if that skinny old chap ain't ahead of any one I've seed yet. The baby-faced feller ain't bad, but it ain't no use for him to try when 'other one's around. Jimmy! ain't he a rouser?"

And the Commodore has been improving his opportunities ever since.

NOT WHAT I WANT NOW.

When Archbishop Secker was laid on his dying bed, his friend, Mr. Talbot, came to see him. He felt it was their last meeting together, so he said:
"You will pray with me, Talbot, before you go away?"

Mr. Talbot rose, and went to look for a Prayer Book.

"That is not what I want now," said the dying prelate; "kneel down by me, and pray for me in the way I know you are used to do."

So the good man, Anelt by his friend's bedside, and bowed out his soul for him before his heavenly Father, in such words as his heart dictated. The dying spirit blessed them to the comfort of the dying man. There was a life and spirit in them that he could not find in forms, however excellent.

When we come to that solemn hour, we shall want something more than a formal religion. It may have satisfied us very well before, but it will give us no light for the dark valley. God be merciful to me, a sinner," will have more meaning to us than a volume of the most beautiful prayers, pronounced with the most faultless elocution.

A SHORT SERMON FOR PARENTS.

It is said that when the mother of Washington was asked how she had formed the character of her son, she replied that she had endeavored early to teach him three things—obedience, diligence, and truth. No better advice can be given to any parent. Teach your child to obey. Let it be the first lesson. You can hardly begin too soon. One of the most successful parents that I have known said that this point was usually settled between him and his children before they were three months old. But it requires constant care to keep up the habit of obedience; and especially to do it in such a way as not to be hurtful to the child's character. Teach your child to be diligent. The habit of being always employed is a great safeguard through life, as well as essential to the culture of almost any virtue. Nothing can be more foolish than the idea which some parents have, that it is not respectable to set their children to work. Play is a good thing. Innocent recreation is an enjoyment, and a child may learn to be diligent in that as well as in other things; but let him learn early to be useful. As to truth, it is the one essential thing. Let everything else be sacrificed rather than that. Without it what dependence can you place in your child. And be sure to do nothing yourself which may countenance any species of prevarication or falsehood. Yet how many parents do teach their children the first lesson of deception!

Boston has a philanthropist who visits the prisons. Said he to a prisoner: "Most of your friends think your sentence was excessive; nothing like it was ever known."

"Yes, I suppose so," was the prisoner's reply; "but then, you know, everything has gone up since the war."
