

MR. DAVIS' SPEECH.

We present extracts from the excellent speech of the Hon. Joseph J. Davis, our immediate representative in Congress on the bill for the repeal of the Resumption bill, the bill that makes the resumption of specie imperative on the first day of January 1879.

Of the effects of the general financial policy of the government, Mr. Davis says: I am more obliged to him because this is one of the most important questions which can engage the attention of Congress, and one which demands our most careful consideration.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let me remind the House that in 1865, twelve years ago, the circulating medium of the country was virtually $200,000,000, for nearly all the public debt was then used as currency.

Mr. Davis makes Mr. Chittenden take water for an ungenerous remark, as follows: The gentleman from New York made a remark in a spirit which I can hardly think he meant when he said: 'Why this frantic haste? I am assured by those who served here when the gentleman now control the House and the country were on the other side of the Potomac with their guns, that no such hurried proceedings were tolerated.'

What is the cause of this? Everybody, Mr. Speaker, can tell when a man is sick. Everybody can tell when the country is in distress. It requires no medical skill to do that. It requires no science or knowledge. Everybody can see when the body lies prostrate with fever; its quickened pulse and parched tongue tell it is about to die.

On the tax of 10 per cent on banks he says: But, sir, what has been done? In the first place there is a banking law which gives a monopoly of banking business to the national bondholders. This law, by a tax of 10 per cent on the circulation of all banks other than national banks, gives them the exclusive privilege of banking, and this tax was imposed solely for this purpose.

Honest money! Why, sir, are not the 'greenbacks' honest money? The gentleman held up one of them yesterday. Is not this honest money? If it is not, pray tell me where are the men who put it upon the country? Were they dishonest? Does the gentleman mean to insinuate that this money, put into the hands of the people by an act of Congress, contaminates the holder and that it is a fraud and a sham to use it as paying private or public debts? The gentleman from New York [Mr. Chittenden] has said it was a fraud and a sham. Who enacted the sham, and who perpetrated the fraud, and upon whom was the fraud perpetrated? The gentleman from New York talks about gentlemen on this side speaking nonsense, and having passion and temper. I think, Mr. Speaker, if the gentlemen on the other side would be less angry it would be better for them.

Then there is another thing. The gentleman from New York said yesterday that it was a breach of faith—and that is a very serious charge—that it was a breach of faith to pay these debts now in this money. Why, sir, he said it was repudiation. Again I point the gentleman to this greenback which I hold in my hand. There it is—Does it fix any time when it is to be paid? It does not. But it promises to pay $10.00 but, he says, there was legislation fixing when it should be paid.

In regard to the effects of the different modes of contraction Mr. Davis shows, Now, Mr. Speaker, let me remind the House that in 1865, twelve years ago, the circulating medium of the country was virtually $200,000,000, for nearly all the public debt was then used as currency.

Mr. Davis makes Mr. Chittenden take water for an ungenerous remark, as follows: The gentleman from New York made a remark in a spirit which I can hardly think he meant when he said: 'Why this frantic haste? The to-day relatively in the market than gold is. If the Government had said that silver should be the currency in which the bonds should be paid, that silver should be the money received for duties on importations, I believe it is demonstrably clear as anything not a question of mathematics that the same gentlemen who are now howling for gold would be crying: 'Give us silver dollars!' For there is not silver enough in the country to pay the imports for one year, there is not enough of it to pay interest on our national bonds. Silver would to-day be worth more than gold, because in point of value it is the scarcer of the two metals.

Mr. Davis presents a statement of the value of gold and silver from 1821 to 1877, and shows the rapidity and dishonesty of the bond holders who demand payment for their bonds in gold, when the bonds were all bought in currency or its equivalent when gold was at a high premium.

There is not one of these men who loaned to the Government money when it was worth at least 30 per cent of what greenbacks are now worth. Yet they talk about being paid in a degraded and disgraced currency. There is not one who gets silver who will not get twenty cents on the dollar more than he loaned, and yet they talk about a degraded currency. There is not one who if he genuinely owns in the dollar but will get more than he loaned. Where, then, comes in the difference? Where comes in the increase? It all has happened where comes in the increase? Where comes in the injustice? Men have by shrewd policy and the power of the law put this thing on the country, and if the country rises up and says, 'This shall go on no longer,'

The public voice demands that there shall no longer be one money for the bondholder and another for the laboring man. The country demands that this discrimination shall cease. The country demands that the people shall not be taxed to death to pay a class of creditors who are not themselves taxed at all and in coin not named in the original contract. The country demands that these men shall be dealt fairly with and no more; and that the debtor shall not be robbed for the creditor. It demands we shall cease to take out of the pockets of the debtor from thirty to forty cents on the dollar to pay the creditor in gold when the creditors themselves are not taxed.

One thing is sure and cannot be gainsaid. Gentlemen on the other side will not accept of anything but gold. All I have to say is, it is better to let it run away than to remain here as a mighty Moloch, sucking the labor of the country. It is said that justice is done to capital. One thing is quite certain, that while every other species of property has depreciated the bonds held by the bondholders have advanced in value.

Whatever fortune Mr. Davis may have in impressing his views on the representatives of the bondholders, he has the satisfaction of knowing that he fully carries out the wishes of his constituents, and also of feeling that they appreciate his earnest, manly and able effort.

Fallen Crests. The interview reported to have been had between Mr. Hayes and leading Republican Senators, held last week in Washington must take the starch out of those 'liberal' Southern Democrats who interpreted so kindly the tenderness of Mr. Hayes towards them. The distrust we expressed last week of his perseverance it well doing was confirmed even before our article saw the light. Mr. Hayes has had the first shock of conflict with his old party friends and at once shows his readiness to yield. He was prompt to express his desire to be in harmony with the leaders of the Republican party, and he thought that his policy acted, as it was intended, to the perpetuation and maintenance of that party. He went further; and we wish to call the attention of our credulous brethren to his words: 'It was his expectation and belief of this policy (the policy of appointing Democrats to office,) that it would promote a coalition of the old Whigs and other elements naturally opposed to the Democratic party in the South, and eventually secure six or eight Southern Senators to the Republicans.'

This frank avowal of a treacherous purpose will, we hope, open the eyes of those whose sanguine temperaments have led them to expect that anything good could come out of Nazareth; who have believed that the creature of fraud could not be possibly saturated with deceit; who have believed that a horn foe of the Democratic party would specially shape his policy to conciliate that party and destroy his own organization; who have believed that the political millennium had come, when the ravens of self-radicalism was to lie down with the stricken lamb of Southern Democracy.

Mr. Hayes has willed somewhat sooner than we expected. A decent defense of Cabinet appointments was due to them and time; their sacrifice will be the next step in the movement, and it will be yielded; and then in steady succession will all those steps backward be taken to restore the antagonism of the North to the South, the only foundation on which Northern Republicanism can stand. Happily, that Republicanism is not so formidable as once it was; Northern constituencies are not so blind to its wickedness as once they were. And Western men find that they have more substantial interests to live for than paandering to sectional hostility. But as long as there are officers to secure and to fill, as long as there are frauds to come up and, and corruptions to conceal, so long will the Republican party forego its right to retain and to secure power.

The warning has been given to the Democratic party. Let it be heeded.

CONGRESS. During the past week, the most important act was the passage of the bill repealing the resumption act by the House by a vote of 136 to 120. The South and the West voted together for repeal; the Middle and New England States voting against repeal. The bill has yet to go to the Senate.

In the Senate, time has been occupied with the contested cases, from Louisiana and South Carolina. On the motion of Mr. Thurman, dem., to discharge the Committee on Privileges and Elections from the further consideration of those cases, Judge Davis of Illinois, and Patterson of S. C., and Governor of Florida, voted with the Democrats, carrying the motion. The Republicans are distressed to find themselves for the first time in 25 or 30 years in a minority, and are making every exertion to get up a minority, but their power may be restored. The main question came up again on Monday. If Butler of S. C. can be seated then by his vote the Democratic Senate from Louisiana will come in.

The bill making appropriations for the Paris Exposition was passed, the Southern delegation generally opposing it. Mr. Steele of N. C. procured the adoption of an amendment, requiring that at least four of the Commissioners shall be practical agriculturists. The length of other articles in this issue compels a curtailment of Congressional matters.

THE WAR. Kars has fallen into the hands of the Russians after an obstinate combat in which the Turks lost 15,000 killed, wounded and prisoners. Armenia is now in a fair way of falling into the hands of the invaders. In Turkey in Europe, Pleven, so long a stronghold, is a pariently on the point of surrendering to the Russians, who seem to be on the high road to victory everywhere. Greece is assuming a warlike attitude towards Turkey, and Servia seems now at the eleventh hour ready to take active part with Russia. Montenegro has nearly expelled the Turks, and the Crescent seems to waver. On the other hand England is becoming desperately alarmed at Russian success, and active intervention seems probable. Great events are ahead.
