[For the Patriot.] French Broad River.

Running, rearing, raining tiver,
With thy sparkling, brightest water,
Dashing onward—seaward ever,
Fair as any chieftains' daughter. On thy hanks the Indian rosmed,

Pres as the monarch of the waste,"
But long years have o'er him firms,
Leaving no vestige of his race. He chared the deer, caught the fish, White man's face disturbed him not;

All was free as a j syons wish, Happiness, peace and bealth his lot Years roll on -how changed the scene.
The "racing river" still the same,
It's flashing waters still I ween.
Reflect not back the Indian name.

No red man aboots his abarp cance, Athwart this tapid, splashing stream, An iron horse is on the abore, With eyes of fire and breach of steam.

This "racing river" attil rans its course, As when the red men passed in ranks. It now salutes the iron horse, Gliding in grandeur, down its banks. The stately hemicak still pads it's head, As when the dusky maidens were in view.
It now salutes the palsoe care—'t is said,
a reighted with maidens of a paler hue

The Indian whose no longer shricks.

Along the spure and justing peaks,
He sleeps in far off hunting grounds,
Beyond the reach of mortal sounds.

"Tokesty," lovely "racing river,"
"A thing of beauty, a joy forever,"
Bythe thou the feet of crag and peak,
Thou river bold, with the dashing sweet

The United States Senate.

[Wash Letter in Atlanta Constitution.] DeTor queville pronounced the American Senate the nublest body of men in the world. That was 40 years ago, or more. The remark may be true now, for there are some illustrious men in the Senate, but one who sees the show every day and occasionally glimpses behind the scenes has many of his poetic notions of its magnificence. day morning contains a lengthy and The great men are not as elequent, very interesting account of the or as witty, or as wise as you think celebration of Cowpens Centennial they would be. > The Atlanta Constitution has discovered a corner in clay peas, and says the demand in the New Orleans market has beretofore taken about one hundred and eight thousand bushels. With this fact as a basis, the organizers of the corner pursued their way eagerly into the statistics of the subject. They discovered that the crop would be wenty thousand bushels short -in other words that only about one hundred and sixty thousand bushels would be gathered. They thereapon armed themselves for the conflict, and proceeded to buy up the crop. In point of fact, they bought one hundred and forty thousand bushels, at from 60 cents to $1.03, and the market has been squeezed and tightened quait the price has reached $1.75 and $2.06 -figures which show a comfortable sum to the credit of those who arranged the corner.

The Raleigh News Observer says these speculative corners are becoming very fashionable, and there is no telling how long the genii of the ring will arrange to squeeze he market on whippoorwill peas. Our farmers should therefore, take time by the bindleg as well as the forelock, and plant largely of those varieties of peas which, unlike the clay pea, are not loaded. It might all sorts, but the cornering would go on all the same. We hope, moreover, that the day will come when the farmers of the South will be enabled to corner the cotton market in their own interest and behalf.
