WITH HIGHEST HONOR

Dr. W. J. RICHARDSON Give me no strong, swift wings Of eagle, or of dove! Mine be the humbler heart that sings Amid all sweet and homely things, And clear, and free, its music flings, Nesting beside the hidden springs Of loyaity and love. For me, no hand of might,

To batter down the wrong! Fain would I, rather, keep the light Of willing service burning bright. Make glad the day, serene the night, With faith unswerving point the right To those who shall be strong.

No lonely glories, mine, Cold stars that cannot warm ! claim the heritage divine of those who pour their life like wine. That other lives may fruit, and shine, Rich clusters on the ripening vine-Brave beacons 'mid the storm.

Nor laurel crown, nor bay, My deep desire can fill! But that at last, when dies the day, Op. Ward's Drug Store. Leal men, and pure in heart, may say, "Our mother armed us for the fray; H. BROOKS, Her love, undaunted, led the way, Her love shall lead us still."
