COMMUNICATION

Editor Tar Heel:

My Dear Sir:
May I, through your column speak a word to my fellows in Christ, of whatever name in Elizabeth City and adjacent parts?

The Laymen's Missionary movement has come so conspicuously to the fore in recent days and the theme is stirring men's hearts and arousing so much interest that I venture this suggestion to our public: "That we begin as soon as possible to hold meetings to study the movement and put ourselves in touch with the men who are leading in it. At least seventy-five of the larger cities in this country will hold conventions when The Conversion of the World in this Generation" is the subject for discussion. Many of these conventions have been held and thousands of our most earnest and successful business men have figured at these gatherings and spoken for the cause.

My suggestion is that the means of our various churches form themselves into chapters to study the subject and within the next two or three months this to have a mass meeting or have a chapter together and at such time to invite some of the great missionaries of the world to address us.

The desire to catch the spirit that is so characteristic of this world-wide movement.

We want the facts in the case and

Mr. Editor, have read more or less on this subject, but believe you will agree with me, that we should have and do something definite on the matter.

The men of my church will I hope form their organization and begin reading the splendid books to be had for the purpose.
