The enormity of the hen industry in the United States is grasped by a very few people. That the eggs we eat every year would make an omelet in which the earth could be wrapped, and a seckinge long enough to reach from the earth to the moon and back again; that two Panama canals or a congressional library built every seven days represents the value of the American hen in dollars and cents, are a few of the terse comparisons made in the Christmas Scrap Book by Gibson Willets in an article of absorbing interest and wonder rul facts.

Excepting man himself shid the cow, her majesty, the hen, out strips every living thing on earth as a money producer, and as a contributor to the national menus he is also hardly second to any.
