Troy Graham, murder; plea of Day at Rowland while crazy

Lewis Walker, larceny; months on roads. In Thursday's paper it was stated that Walker was sentenced to six months on roads for assault with deadly weapon, which was an error and was due to the fact that the entry in the minute docket book in the clerk of the court's office made no mention of the case for larceny but under one head cited three cases, apparently all for a. d. w., and stated that in the first case the sentence was as above. The sentence was for stealing a bag of meal from the store of White & Gough of Lumberton. Judge Carter continued the solititor's prayer for judgment because he was afraid Walker's mental condition was not sound, asked Judge Bragaw to pronounce judgment, which he did.

Jim Buck, larceny; after the jury was empeneled a juror was taken sick and a juror was thereupon withdrawn, a mistrial ordered and case continued.

Hector Brown, retailing; plead Wash Maultsby, larceny; plead
