MARIETTA AND VICINITY

A Running Account of a Between-Trains Visit—One of the Best Sections of Robeson and Some of Its People—Fine Farms, Comfortable Homes

If one were to start out to write about any one of the numerous splendid sections of Robeson county with the idea of doing complete justice to his subject he would have to have more time at his disposal for that particular task than the Robesonian man has just now for special mention of the Marietta section, in which splendid section he had the pleasure of spending a few hours one day recently. And so this is merely a running account, intended merely as such and not to be taken as an attempt to measure up to the height of the great argument the subject opens.

That being understood, and to begin at the beginning, The Robesonian man got off the train at Marietta about eleven of the clock the other day and immediately stumbled into the arms and under the care of Mr. Sam Oliver, who has a heart as big as some of the Oliver farms around there; which is some big. While hanging around the station and the store just opposite for a few minutes, some kind soul "busted" wide open the peaceful quiet of the village by ringing—just for fun, or just for devilment, as you choose—a large new bell which had just arrived, and was still on the station platform, for the church of the colored folk. Some noise that bell made, proving beyond a doubt that when it rings from the belfry of the church to which it was on its way, people far and near will know that some service is going to be held by the brethren in black in their own house of worship. Mr. Oliver persuaded the festive young man who was ringing the bell that everybody was satisfied it would make a noise, and then we made our way across to the neat, well-kept and well-stocked store of Messrs. J. S. Oliver & Son. Just before that, though—you see, this is just a running account of what happened to a wayfarer, and if you don't want to read all about it you can skip about; but you'd better not; and this belongs right here—before going over to the store of the Messrs. Oliver Mr. W. Tom Jenrette was observed driving down the road, and as The Robesonian man used to know Prof. Jenrette when he was a merchant in Lumberton, he went out and hailed him. Prof. Jenrette was in a hurry, for he was on his way after a colored person to help get up hay. They are busy folks at Marietta; so we did not have time to much more than say howdy to Prof. Jenrette.

At the store we found Mr. W. M. Oliver, the "Son" of the firm, also busy, but not too occupied to see at a glance that here was a wayfarer who was hungry, and—right here is where I part company with "we"—I was glad enough, making no bones about it, to accept his invitation.

And if I was glad to accept his invitation on general principles before going to his hospitable home, certainly I was doubly glad afterwards. For it is indeed a privilege to enjoy the hospitality of Mr. W. M. Oliver and his charming wife. Mr. and Mrs. Oliver did better than give me a good dinner; they did not leave me to beguile in idleness the hours between trains. Mr. Oliver suggested that I might take his horse and buggy, drive over the immediate neighborhood and see something of that splendid farming section. He himself was too busy at the store to spare the time to go with me, so Mrs. Oliver kindly consented to pilot me, for fear I might get lost.

Through sunlit fields on an ideal Indian summer day in October, the open road; by pasture lands, here and there cattle grazing; cotton fields, snowy white, stretching away in the distance; haystacks dotting the landscape here and there; cornfields; potato patches—patches nothing; there were acres of potatoes; by farm homes with clean, well-kept yards, homes inviting to rest and comfort.

We passed by the home and farm of Mr. G. S. Page and made a brief stop at the home of Messrs. Oscar and John Page and their maiden sisters. This home, and the home of Mr. J. S. Oliver, where we made another brief stop farther on, are country homes one loves to dream about in idle moments when one thinks one would like to quit the town and town-made things and get out in God's country and live and work and get brown from the soil, and get tired and hungry, and let great thoughts of great men sink deep into one's soul.

Mr. Oscar Page has been an invalid for two years and more and one of the Misses Page recently has suffered with her eyes, an operation being necessary, and her eyes were bandaged, shutting out all light; but the home inside was just as cheerful as the glorious sunlight of that perfect October day; and we could but wonder, and admire, and thank God that it was so.

Mr. John Page came in from the fields and brought the bigness of out of doors with him. Besides raising

BRONCHIAL COLD
Yields To Delicious Vinol

Philadelphia, Pa.—"Last Fall I was troubled with a very severe bronchial cold, headaches, backache, and sick to my stomach. I was so bad I became alarmed and tried several medicines, also a doctor, but did not get any relief. A friend asked me to try Vinol and it brought the relief which I craved, so now I am enjoying perfect health."

everything else, almost, Mr. Page is a past master of the art of raising potatoes. He raises enough potatoes to feed the hosts of Israel. He knows how.

Reluctantly leaving this home, we drove next to the home of Mr. J. S. Oliver, where we found Mr. Oliver at work near the house. We found Mr. Page and Mr. Oliver just as busy as they find the town man when they come to town. Mr. Oliver's farm is one of the best in all that God-blessed section, and hard by his home, right beside the road, he has the finest field of cotton I have seen anywhere this year.

After a few pleasant moments spent in this lovely home, the journey back to town was made by way of the fine farm of Mr. D. J. Oliver.

Even the careless reader is bound to have concluded by this time that this is the country of the Pages and Olivers; and he guesses right; and they are prosperous, progressive, intelligent farmers and good citizens. They believe in and practice diversified farming in the Marietta section; hence the prosperous people. And the social life of the community leaves nothing to be desired when compared with the social life of many large towns. The ladies have their clubs, and their town sisters would not find life dull or uninteresting there.

I might mention the commodious and handsome school building at Marietta and the excellent school taught there by Prof. Jenrette and his assistants—Mrs. W. M. Oliver has charge of the music department, and I believe that Miss Rachel Oliver, daughter of Mr. J. S. Oliver, is one of his assistants this year—and other things about the town and section might be mentioned; but this article already is too long; and besides, I said at the outset that this was not to be a catalogue of the many good things one may observe at Marietta and round about in half a day.

But if I ever get the chance I'm going to take a day off and try to find out something more about this good section of Robeson and its good people; and then I hope to unfold a tale that shall be really worth while.

Distress in the Stomach
There are many people who have a distress in the stomach after meals. It is due to indigestion and easily remedied by taking one of Chamberlain's Tablets after meals. Mrs. Henry Padghan, Victor, N. Y., writes: "For some time I was troubled with headache and distress in my stomach after eating, also with constipation. About six months ago I began taking Chamberlain's Tablets. They regulated the action of my bowels and the headache and other annoyances ceased in a short time." Obtainable everywhere.

It is estimated that more than 10,000 people attended the clubbush county educational and agricultural rally held at Chadbourne Friday. About 100 prizes were awarded exhibitors. More than 2,000 children marched in the parade, representing different schools or townships. The principal address was made by U. S. Senator E. D. Smith of Florence, S. C.

Lillie Belle Tolley, 8 year old, was struck and instantly killed in Asheville Friday by an automobile owned and driven by Mrs. Thomas E. Teasley. Evidence introduced at the coroner's inquest indicated that the machine was being driven at a moderate rate of speed when the child attempted to cross the street in front of it and then turned and started back across the street.

How Cotton Markets Vary in This State

To show the variation in the price of cotton and cotton seed on the various markets of the State, the North Carolina Division of Markets has established an additional report to its weekly letter on the market of the State. The new letter is on cotton alone and shows the market for the middling cotton and seed October 21. The report this week compared with the market of Atlanta and Norfolk is as follows:
