1919

The old year with its ailures and successes, its hopes and disappointments, lies behind us, leaving with us its heritage of experience and the great lessons that are not taught in schools, and that can only be learned by living.

The lesson that for the true heart and the strong hand there is no such word as "fail" and that the years are not lost, but are as stepping stones leading us upward to a broader and truer conception of life and its meaning, so that we can look forward with courage, confident that all is well.

A good beginning is half the battle, so let us meet the New Year in the true New Year spirit: the spirit of hopefulness, of goodwill, of courage, and determination to make the coming year better than any that has gone before.
