LAWS GOVERNING CONTROL OF SMALLPOX

Vaccination of School Children.

Section 1. Upon receipt of written instructions from the County Health Officer by the teacher of principal of any school in Robeson county, directing all children attending said school to become immunized against smallpox, it shall be the duty of said teacher or principal after the date specified in said instructions to require from each child in attendance at said school, satisfactory evidence of immunity against smallpox.

Section 2. After the date specified in the above mentioned instructions it shall be unlawful for any parent or guardian to send to any school so notified any child not presenting satisfactory evidence of immunity against smallpox, or to cause him or her to attend any such school.

Section 3. In the meaning of this regulation "satisfactory evidence of immunity against smallpox" shall comprise the following: (a) Successful vaccination against smallpox; (b) evidence of vaccination against smallpox within the past year, supported either by positive signs of such vaccination, or by certificate from a reputable physician; (c) a previous attack of smallpox, certified to by a reputable physician.

Section 4. The County Health Officer shall visit each school notified in accordance with Section 1, at least once after receipt of said instructions by the teacher or principal of said school, and shall administer free vaccination against smallpox to all non-immune children not specifically instructed by their parents or guardian to refuse such service.

NOTICE FOR SCHOOL TEACHERS IN ROBESON COUNTY.

It has come to the attention of this office that some of the school teachers in Robeson county have complained because they have been asked to make the physical examination of the school children, under their instructions, as required by the State law. I desire to call attention of all teachers to Chapter 192, Public Laws of 1919.

In accordance with this act, letters with detail instructions in regard to these examinations have been sent out to all teachers in the county. Let me state here that the law requiring the examination of the school children by the teachers was not made by the county board of health, but it is the duty of the county board of health to see that the law is complied with. It is a State Law and a good one. It is just as important to cure children of clinical defects as it is to teach them reading, writing and arithmetic.

In making this law the State Legislature did not intend that the school teachers should pass on these children as medical experts. That is not the idea at all. It is the duty of the teachers to follow the outline of instructions which has been gotten up by the State Board of Health, to guide them in making these examinations. The teacher is asked to record any obvious defects, or any suspected defect on the physical examination card. This is merely to call the attention of the medical examiner to that particular child. It is not necessary for the medical examiner to examine every child in every school in order to pick out the defective ones. It would be a practical impossibility unless there could be six to twelve medical examiners to each county. But if the teachers will follow the printed instructions and record the results of their examinations on the examination cards, the medical examiner can examine all children that the teacher has reason to believe defective.

All teachers are urged to complete their examinations as soon as possible, and to notify the Health Officer as soon as this is done, so that he may visit the schools and examine all the children suspected of having some physical defect.

THE PASSING SHOW

M. MONTE.

Willie bought a little car, and everywhere he went, it exuded raucous noises, and a very gassy scent. Purchased when it was tipsy, it continued on its spree. When it couldn't find a ditch to fill, it forthwith climbed a tree. When speeding along the highway, if by chance it missed a hole, in chagrin it headed for the nearest telepole. The countryside was filled with frightened cows and sheep and things, and at its coming old and gentle but flabbergasted teams took wings. Stern retribution at length o'ertook him, he tumbled down a well, and when they fished him out again, he said, is sure is — Tut! Tut! Its ever thus when rhyming, with every best intent, a line will often end with a word you never meant.

We receive ever and anon bunches of assorted literature, on the general subject of "system." Systems are in a broad sense good things to have about the premises. There are systems by dipping into which one can remember anything that ever happened. This is not altogether a good system. There are some things it were better to forget, and a system that would be always reminding you of them would be somewhat of a nuisance. From the blank before us we assume that one after becoming expert might even recall things that never happened. But since we have met a considerable number of people who could do this readily, without any system, it does not appear as a prime necessity in this particular.

The next system gets more personal, in fact we say it is too familiar with folks. It proceeds to point out from a wrinkle which you have fancied hidden, some unknown faculty which is working to the ruin of one's facial landscape. From an expansive and more or less noble brow, it is a certainty that an untold wealth of intellect lies just behind. We shall not argue the whole question of various high and low brows, but we assert without fear of contradiction that failure often lurks in such diagnosis. We have known those whose brows reached surprising altitudes, who were intellectually non compos mentis and several other things. We have met brows that were so expansive that the rear collar button appeared in the perspective, and the result when studied was disappointing to any kind of a system, and extremely so to ours.

Then there's the handwriting expert, who, shown a mystic scrawl that might be the work of a hen with St. Vitus dance and complications, can tell one's family history for several generations back. But there's one thing they cannot tell, and that is whose name the scrawl represents. The most prominent writing expert we ever met could not write at all, and he abridged Webster's best English by stating that he was a "handwriting expert."

Speaking of writing, why is it that the higher one gets in life the more intricate one's signature becomes? A youth who can with one sweep form a rhythmic letter, with a bird's head hovering above it, goes in successive stages into sudden whirls, and wiggles, and when the pen stops he hasn't the least idea what he's committed in the way of a travesty on a signature. A large capital in one's signature, to go back to system again, presumes one's head is swelled. We don't, altogether see this. Suppose one has, say, a "B" as a starting point. Why, we ask, should this, because this letter is wellfixed in appearance, not to say fat and inclined to embonpoint, stamp its wearer as possessor of the capemajor.

But, after all is said, the systematic man—we speak now in general terms—is the man who has the least perception of system. Find the yap who yawns system most, and tag him as one who never in his brief lifetime has done anything promptly. As a proof, ask his wife if he was ever known to reach dinner on time.

SEEN AND HEARD

(BY HAPPY JACK.)

Wouldn't it be fine if one could be rich all the year 'round except when the time arrives for listing taxable property? It's a sight how we are all opposed to paying taxes. What I started out to say, however, was that there lives in Lumberton a man whose State and county tax this year totals seven cents. Hardly worth figuring up, is it?

Speaking of riches and taxes, I heard one man make the statement that the poorer a man is the happier he is. You ask, can this be true? I am inclined to believe the less cotton a man has the happier he is, that is, at the present writing.

Had you heard this one? Charlie Butler told it as follows:

Two colored soldiers were returning from France. One advised the other that he had learned something from the French people and he was going to show the folks something when reached the homeland. He was going to equip himself with a white suit, hat, shoes, socks, shirt, tie and be a white man. His pal then advised him that he was going to do the opposite. He was going to buy himself a black suit, hat, shoes, socks, shirt, tie and gloves. "What you gwine to do dat fer, ain't you black enuf?" asked the other. "Ise gwine to atten' your funerl," was the reply.

A full-grown 'possum was caught on Elm street, near the municipal building, one day recently. When first observed Mr. 'Possum was walking up the street as though he had been to town before.

Where's the Republican that said if Harding was elected cotton would sell for 40 cents the pound right soon after? We're all sadly disappointed so far.

What's smatter with the sweet potato market? Several farmers have tried in vain to dispose of a load of potatoes here recently and failed.

"I'll take them home and feed them to my hogs," said one farmer.

Did you purchase any stocks Many did and I am informed, reliably so, that the purchase of so much stock in various and sundry things is one of the very things that makes money a little tight. The people purchased freely, giving notes. The banks handled the notes, parting with the cash for them. The money is gone and the notes, many of them, are unpaid. Sad thought, but very true.

Some people learn by experience that if they desire to criticize a mule, it's best to do it to his face, advises the Sioux City Journal. Wouldn't it be better to do the same thing when you wish to criticize a man?

Gifts That Do Not Last

Clothing and Dry Goods, are gifts that are necessary, useful and ornamental but they soon wear out. Furs make beautiful and expensive gifts, but they have to be kept in storage the greater part of the time where they are eaten by moths. Perfumes are fine, but short lived. The memory fades with the odor and the gift is soon forgotten. Furniture and household wares cannot be given as Christmas presents with a view to long last as they soon wear out. They do not last. Money, makes a useful gift, but is soon spent and forgotten.

The most valuable relics of the prehistoric ages are gifts that have lasted, and they were made and sold by the JEWELERS.
