Arms Conference Ready for History

Top Pact Agreements and Resolutions Formally Approved at Open Meeting.

Washington, Feb. 1.—The conference on the limitation of armament is now ready for history.

Virtually all of its work was completed today in the fifth plenary session, which lasted from 11 until nearly 3 o'clock and was featured by a businesslike purpose to get through and an almost total absence of thrills.

There is left the framing of the Chinese treaty that will embody the agreements reached as to China, the report upon the Chinese Eastern railway, the debate on the 21 demands and another detail or two, action on all of which is but a matter of hours.

The delegates figuratively hurled themselves on this work immediately after the plenary session. Chairman Hughes called meetings of the subcommittee on the railroad and of the Far Eastern committee in the same breath in which he adjourned the open session.

This driving impulse to be done with everything led Mr. Hughes to depart from his purpose to lay before the conference only the naval treaty and the submarine and poison gas resolutions embodied in a separate treaty. In addition he submitted the Shantung agreement and a large number of Chinese resolutions adopted by the Far Eastern committee.

Hurrying to the end, too, and perhaps, having an eye on a tenstrike for the British upon public opinion, Mr. Balfour arose in the open session following the Shantung announcement and stated the British will return the Wei-Hei-Wei lease to China. It ought to have thrilled, but it did not. The lease is not very important and the British action was expected sooner or later.

Also seeing the end in sight M. Albert Sarraut, of the French delegation, took advantage of the submission of the naval treaty and of France's assent to it, to deliver a lengthy speech in defense of France against charges of imperialism, especially the charges from the American press. That also ought to have thrilled, but it did not. M. Sarraut had the misfortune of the Briand and Viviani speeches having been given as samples of French eloquence and he was not equal to the standard. The one real thrill, unless the realization that Shantung was at last a settled issue gave a thrill when Baron Shidehara and Minister Sze spoke, came from Secretary Hughes. He was on his feet most of the time, rattling along as rapidly and as unemotionally as a tailor giving measurements. But he got out of that mood when he concluded his discussion of the naval treaty, in which he has had a deeper, more fervent personal interest than in anything else.

Called Greatest Peace Step. "This treaty absolutely ends the race in naval competition," declared Mr. Hughes in a stirring voice that brought quick, emphatic applause. "It is the greatest forward step to establish the reign of peace."

The agreements submitted to the Conference in the plenary session and given the assent of the powers follows:

Naval treaty, including Pacific fortifications agreement. Treaty embodying the Root submarine and poison gas resolutions. Shantung agreement reached between the Chinese and Japanese delegates. (This did not require assent.) Agreement to abolish foreign post-offices in China by January 1, 1923.

To Study Troops Question. Agreement for international commission to study situation as to foreign troops in China and make recommendations looking to removal. Resolution guaranteeing the open door in China with supplemental agreement of powers not to support their nationals in violations of the open door.

Resolutions against discrimination on railroads in China, with recommendation that Chinese roads be unified under Government control. Resolution advising China to disband the troops now under arms and controlled either by the Government or by provincial leaders, thus to reduce disbursements.

New Pacts To Be Made Public. Agreement that all treaties, conventions, exchanges of notes, international understandings, concessions, etc., affecting China be filed with the Secretary-General, new ones to be made public within 60 days after consummation.

Agreement to restore China's rights in radio stations on her soil, with supplementary statement disavowing judgment as to facts in case of each station, and insisting upon a plan of open-door policy in this field. The customs resolution, under which China will be given a 5 per cent. effective customs rate, instead of the present effective 3 1/2 per cent. rate, and a commission will be named to study the question of allowing further increase, was mentioned by Secretary Hughes, but was not submitted from the Far Eastern committee because the convention has not been entirely framed.—John W. Owen in Baltimore Sun.
