A Word Relative To The Tobacco Crop

To the Farmers of Robeson and Adjoining Counties: I wish to say a word through the columns of your paper relative to the crop of tobacco you will begin to harvest within a short time.

I have not been able to see your crop, but I have information in hand saying that the crop is uneven and of different ages. This is no reason why you should not have some good desirable tobacco, and I wish to warn you about the curing. There is no method by which you can cure ripe and green tobacco in the same barn. So bear in mind when you commence with your priming that the most essential thing in making good cures is to get your leaves as uniform in ripeness as you possibly can.

I also wish to warn you in regard to the suckering of the plant after it is topped, by all means keep the plant free from suckers, as there is nothing that will ruin the quality and body of the plant as much as a growth of suckers.

We are anticipating the opening of the Lumberton Market on the tenth day of August. We will have a good corps of Buyers and a good set of Warehousemen, and there is no reason why we should not have as good market as there is in the South Carolina Belt.

I wish to thank you kindly for the patronage you have given me in the past and you will again find me at the Big Banner to look after your every interest the very best I know.

Wishing you much success and honoring for a liberal share of your patronage during the 1926 season.

I am your Friend,

J. D. PERKINS, adv.

DR. EMILE COUE PASSES.

Famous Advocate of Autosuggestion in Treatment of Diseases Goes Way of All Flesh.

Nancy, France, July 2.—(AP)—Dr. Emile Coue, the famous advocate of auto-suggestion in the treatment of illnesses, died today.

Dr. Coue called himself a professor of applied psychology. His fame as an auto-suggestive healer came after the European war when his modest dwelling the Rue Jeanne 'Are was thronged daily with sufferers demanding his services. Soon he was called upon to lecture in France, England, Spain, Portugal and the United States.

Dr. Coue was president of the Lorraine Society of Applied Psychology and author of a brochure, "Self Mastery by Conscious Auto-Suggestion." He was 69 years of age. After 30 years as a druggist in Troyes, Professor Coue upon his marriage to the daughter of a noted horticulturist, made his home here. He was a modest, cheery little man and a rapid speaker. Among his patients at one time was the late Marquis Curzon, of Kedleston.

Prof. Emile Coue for many years practiced his theories of auto-suggestion as a more or less obscure physician in Nancy. He became known to the man in the street, however, by the development of his formula, "Day by day in every way I am getting better and better."

Dr. Coue visited the United States in 1923 and became the center of much controversy among physicians as to the efficacy of the healing powers of auto-suggestion. Although he announced that he had given up his "day by day" chant, it spread throughout the country. Dr. Coue gave many demonstrations of his methods in American clinics.

UNCLE JOE'S LETTER

The Rain and Its Wonderful Blessing to the County.

The rain, the rain, what a blessing it is, coming after a long spell of dry weather. Week follows week, and no rain. The sun rises each morning like a red hot ball and slowly burns its way across the sky through the long summer day. Day after day the farmer watches the sky for signs of moisture, but the heavens seem of brass and the earth as iron, and between the two, the breeze plays upon his cheeks with a breath that is hot and scorching. The crops in the fields, the vegetables in the garden give small promise of a crop.

Even the weeds have a wilted discouraging look. The farmer, weary with his toil, which seems to go for nothing, says: "If this weather holds on much longer, I see nothing, nothing ahead but financial ruin. I'll not realize enough to pay my fertilizer bill." The fertilizer is lying there in the furrow and not enough rain for the crop to make use of it.

But one morning, as he goes to his work, a single thread which a spider had thrown out during the night sweeps across his face. The air has a fresher feel, seems full of moisture, and he says those are signs of rain. By noon the white caps have marshaled themselves thickly above his head, and late in the evening there comes to his ear the welcome rumble of distant thunder on the western horizon. The sun is darkened, huge masses of clouds roll nearer and nearer, and at last, with a swift rush and skurry, the raindrops fall with noisy patter, quieting down to a steady pour which continues all night and on into the next day.

What a transformation! The rain brings with it the fertilizing dust and impurities of the atmosphere, making breathing easier and purer, and adding hundreds of dollars to the farmer's income. Under such circumstances, hard is the heart and sealed the lips that will not say: "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

The fact that the fertilizing shower adds to the farmer's wealth brings to mind a story which illustrates this truth.

Once upon a time in the long ago of our country's history, before the day of bobbed hair and dresses bobbed at both ends, and bobbed morals too, for that matter, there lived a well-to-do farmer. So cheerful of a well-to-do farmer, so skillful in the arts of housekeeping, such as baking a light and flaky loaf of bread, serving delicious and appetizing meals, that all the young men in the neighborhood became suitors for her hand. At last all gave way except two, a tailor and a farmer. Between the two the rivalry was keen and spirited. As for the young lady, she was undecided. Sometimes the tailor, sometimes the farmer rose higher in her estimation. Her final decision was rendered after this wise: One rainy day the young farmer saw the tailor with his cloth and scissors enter the home of the girl they both loved. He concluded he had as much right there as the tailor and that he would follow and keep tab on him. It was not a bad idea, their going courting in the day time, coming unexpectedly upon the object of their affections in seeking her in her work-day garb, going about her household duties, just as she would be doing after marriage.

The tailor spent his time working on his cloth. The young farmer having nothing to do, and as it continued to rain, said he would lie down and take a nap. But while his eyes were shut his mind was open and wide awake, and he heard all that was said. After some time the tailor said to the girl: "See, here, I am busy at work, earning an honest penny while this lazy fellow is sleeping."

This impressed the young woman so that she felt like giving the tailor the preference.

The farmer letting off a mild snore now and then, and after waiting the proper length of time so as to avoid suspicion, that he had overheard the tailor, woke up, rubbed his eyes stretched and yawned and said in a careless matter of fact way: "I tell you this is a fine rain. It will be worth two hundred dollars to me."

The girl, hearing this, concluded that she loved the farmer more than she did the tailor. They were married and lived together happily ever afterward.

The fine rains we have had recently will mean hundreds of dollars to Bladen county farmers. So far as I have travelled over the county, the crops have picked up wonderfully and have almost made up for the time lost during the drought.

The reasonable weather of the last two weeks should impress more forcibly than ever before, the truth that without the increase which God furnishes through the rain, the farmer's toil would be in vain.

"Uncle Joe."

An Introduction

It is recorded of King David that he once advised certain men to tarry at Jericho until their beards were grown. I have often thought that to be good advice to give to would-be writers—not to rush into print until their beards were grown. As beards are not worn to-day, the advice might be changed to read: "do not break into print until you are old enough to be called 'Uncle.' The reference is, of course, to those who become 'Uncles' at a mature age. As I have just recently qualified on that score, I thought it not amiss to balance an "Aunt Becky" with an "Uncle Joe."

I cannot hope to equal "Aunt Becky" as a correspondent, not having the age and experience to indulge in interesting reminiscences of the past. I shall confine myself to men and measures and the passing events of the day. I shall be a free lance taking up matters of morals, health, religion, ways of farming, the way some men do things and the way men don't do things. Some things I shall
