

as no agreement had been made as to the price here, it was separated from the Cotton; and to the seller it will belong to explain by what management the two articles became so closely connected. It is an unpleasant duty to mention such occurrences, and we regret exceedingly the necessity for this notice—but it is proper that all such practices should be publicly known; the character of the State and the interest of the community alike forbid their concealment. PETERSBURG, DEC. 22. GAS.

We on Wednesday evening witnessed an exhibition new to us, and certainly of a most interesting and diverting kind; consisting of experiments made with Nitrous Oxide Gas, at the Exchange Coffee House, by Dr. Bascom, of Philadelphia. As a preparatory step, the subject discharges the last breath of atmospheric air; then, with nose stopped, inhales with the mouth the Gas from a bag in which it is fixed. The preparatory process occupies about two minutes, and the trance which succeeds, lasts sometimes a little longer. The first gentleman who, on this occasion, inhaled the preparation, surprised the company by breaking out with Hamlet's soliloquy on death, which he recited to the end with correct tone, emphasis and gesture. The next set off in full pursuit of a thief, who, in his imagination, had broken open his store, crying "stop him, stop him!" The third, a gentleman of rather fleshy habit, appeared elevated to the highest pitch of pleasurable excitement; and, in a burst of joyous glee, sang a part of the well known song "The glasses sparkle," &c. The fourth seemed as though he had been touched by the wand of melancholy herself; reciting passages of that cast from the poets, and exhibiting a remarkable contrast with the subject immediately preceding, as to the effects of the Gas upon different constitutions. The fifth danced with the greatest animation and vehemence; while the sixth seemed possessed with the most furious and ungovernable rage, making battle with all in his reach. There was only one gentleman among all who tried the experiment, upon whom the Gas failed of having its wonted and peculiar effect. Upon the whole, we think the exhibition both instructive and pleasing; and one in witnessing which the philosopher may join with equal satisfaction with the thoughtless trifler in search of an hour's amusement.—Intelligencer.

CAROLINIAN.

SALISBURY, (N. C.) TUESDAY, JANUARY 9, 1821.

It has been said, that although envy, which fastens on illustrious characters, does indeed expire, yet it bequeaths its aspersions to that calumny which never dies. This may be true, in general; but to the latter part of it there are certainly some exceptions, as a proof of which we need only refer to the calumny lately cast upon Treasurer Haywood, which has not only expired, but has blasted in its dissolution the character of those who brought it into existence. Who will now dare to whisper aught against the worth and integrity of Mr. Haywood? No one. His character, if possible, stands fairer than ever; and in his case, that calumny which endeavored to blacken it, has actually expired, while the envy which engendered it, is still in existence, and ranking in the bosoms of a few unhappy individuals, who have mixed up for themselves a bitter draught of public detestation.

The public feeling on this subject has manifested itself in different ways; but perhaps in no one more biting severe, and in which ridicule and contempt are more effectually blended, than in that detailed in the following letter, which has been politely put into our hands by a friend.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER

From a Member of the Legislature to his friend in Rowan, dated RALEIGH, DEC. 28, 1820.

"The Assembly adjourned yesterday, after a session of considerable bustle and interest, and not the least cause of excitement was the attempt upon the character of the public Treasurer. The attempt, as you will see by the city papers, recoiled upon the heads of the fomentors.

"The exhibition of the season, as well as the close of the session, occasioned some displays of wit and sarcasm, which have contributed a good deal to the general amusement. Two mornings ago a well formed grave-yard tumult was found near the State-House, having at the head a board carved and painted to represent a tomb-stone; at the top, instead of a death's head, there was an owl holding in his beak No. 1 of a five cent treasury note, and over it an inscription, 'He loved darkness rather than light.' Below, 'Here lie buried the political remains of W. A.', who fell in a contest with talents, integrity, and virtue;" at the bottom, sitting on a coffin, was the devil holding in his hand the Halifax Compiler. This monument attracted a crowd around it for some time, until Mr. W. A., the member from Halifax, coming up, vented his rage upon it in the same manner that he did upon the bottle from which John Randolph threw wine in his face.

"Yesterday morning brought with it another amusement. A neat painting on paper was pre-ted up, called the "Treasury Balance," in one scale of which, marked "Integrity," sat, with the utmost composure, the venerable Treasurer; in the other scale, which was marked "Folly, Envy, Malice," stood four figures, designated as "Little Cyn," "Orator Puff," "Major Bobadil," and "Count Delicacy," who were poised high aloft by the superior weight of the Treasurer. Ready to throw the Compiler into the mounting scale, was Wright making a wrong step upon a rotten stump. Between the scales stood the Devil, acting a treacherous part; for while he was squirting dirty water and spitting fire at the Treasurer, he had his cloven foot under the scale of his four friends kicking them aloft."

MISSOURI.

The National Gazette declared the Missouri compromise an end—and that nothing short of the slave restriction ought to satisfy the members of Congress. Finding that this course may not generally please, that the eastern members will not go all lengths, the Gazette lowers its tone, and now calls upon the "majority who have already acted so well, for a persevering defence of the spirit, provisions, and general authority of the federal constitution"—it says that the people are as much satisfied with the "conduct of the House of Representatives, as disgusted at that of the Senate;" that the amendment of the Senate is "as obviously futile, as the breach of the federal constitution, which they allow, is palpable and ominous." Now we think it one of the best omens that we have seen, that the eastern representatives have so much more discretion than Messrs. Walsh and Poulson, Dwight and Stone. It is evident that they are not "the law and the prophets." We are infinitely better pleased with the language of the New-York American of the 19th.

Richmond Enquirer.

"Under such circumstances there is no reason to believe that she will consent to return to territorial insignificance and submission, nor will any sane man support the policy or even possibility of compelling her to do so. The strength of our confederacy is in public opinion, and if that opinion is divided by sectional limits, no force can give it unity; and even could military control quell disaffection and prevent disunion, the consequences would be as fatal to the conquering as the vanquished party. We take it for granted that no such measure is contemplated even as an ulterior resort, and consequently that such conciliatory steps will be taken as may preserve the Union without a violation of the constitution. For the course that is to accomplish this we look to the moderation and wisdom of Congress:—whatever it may be, they may rest secure of the approbation and support of the great mass of the country, whose attachment to the Union has not been shaken, nor can be affected, by the misguided warmth of zealots or the insidious arts of traitors. A sense of common interest, and feelings of national pride and mutual attachment, are too strongly implanted in the bosoms of the American people, to yield to the influence of temporary irritation fomented by the weak and wicked, or to the suggestions of local political interests, urged by the unprincipled and ambitious."

SPECIE.

Yesterday morning, says the New-York Mercantile Advertiser of Dec. 19th, one hundred and fifty thousand dollars were sent from this city to Philadelphia, for a ship fitting out for India. The money was conveyed by the Messrs. Lyons, proprietors of the Citizens' Line of stages, who fitted out half a dozen extra Post Coaches.

PRIVATE MUNIFICENCE.

Speaking of the munificence of individuals in Massachusetts in endowing religious and literary institutions, the New-York Evening Post says:—"We notice in a list of the benefactions to the Theological Institution at Andover, the following: Samuel Abbott, Esq. $100,000; William Bartlett, Esq. $90,000; Mrs. Norris, $30,000; William Phillips and Son, $15,000; John Norris, Esq. $10,000; Rufus Brown, Esq. $10,000."

CORSICAURUM.

A new mineral earth has lately been found in Corsica, thought to be impregnated with particles of gold. By chemical operation, vases have been made of it for table services, and it is found to vie in color and lustre with the finest vermilion. The name of Corsicaurum has been given to it; it has the property of not discoloring white stuffs, which is not always the case with gold, the most purified and refined.

GEORGE IV.

Among the many new books, says the National Gazette, advertised in the London Morning Chronicle of the 1st of November, is one bearing upon the character of the King, and entitled "Nero Vindicated." To what the monarch has been exposed, may be seen from the following allusive passages of the speeches of Mr. Brougham and Mr. Denman, as reported in the Courier.

Mr. Brougham—Is it of great importance to ask of this witness, who is the solicitor in this cause, who his client is, when we are acting as Counsel for the defendant open and avowed? If I knew who the person was, I could not bring forward documents, speeches and communications without number against him, and highly important to the cause of my client. But, up to this moment, I have never been able to trace "the local habitation—the name" of the unknown being who is the plaintiff in this proceeding. I know not but it may vanish into thin air. I know not under what shape it exists. If shape it might be called, that shape had never been describable in member, joint, or limb. Or substance might be called that shadow reem-

For each seemed either. What seemed his head The likeness of a kingly crown had on. If I could see it, I might interrogate it, and bring out of its mouth, if mouth it had, who and what it is, and whether it be a man. But, up to this moment, we don't know who the party is; it may be some shapeless form without a head; or it may be a head with the semblance of a body.

Mr. Denman—It was observable that the House had two discarded servants, Majoocchi and De Mont, to praise transactions before the tent scene in the palace; and two other discarded servants, Sacchi and Rastelli, to speak to events subsequent to it—to establish the most disgraceful facts that ever polluted the lips of man, and which he (Mr. Denman) should have thought no husband of the slightest feeling would have permitted to have been given in evidence against his wife, even if she had deserted his fond and affectionate embraces, much less if he had driven her into guilt by trusting her from his dwelling; recollecting that the more depraved he showed his wife to be, the more he established his own cruelty and profligacy; and the more imputations he cast upon her, the more he was to be despised, for having abandoned and deserted her.

Notice.

THE subscriber is now finishing a large and commodious house in this place, on the western side of the town, situate between the Male and Female Academies, which he intends as a boarding-house for young ladies. He will furnish them with good board, washing, and lodging, for seventy-five dollars, for this year. He pledges himself that nothing shall be wanting, on his part, to render satisfaction to those who may favor him with their custom.

As parents and guardians are desirous that their children's expenses may be so managed, as if the money had actually all passed through their own hands, he therefore considers the following method of keeping their accounts will answer the purpose:

Those who come to this place, well provided with clothes, will not require any additional ones for some time. However, when they write home, it is very easy to let their parents know what they require, and an answer to said letter will contain an order for said articles, if their parents think it necessary.

The next time they write home, they will mention what such articles cost, which will enable their parents not only to know what articles their children get, but what they cost them. It will, at the same time, with the assistance of the Tutresses, habituate the children to keeping their own accounts, which will be very essential to them during life, and the improvement they may make in this little business, will be very gratifying to their parents.

It is unnecessary for the young ladies to trouble their parents with the purchase of books, quills, ink, paper, &c. as what the Academy exercises require must be had. It is only necessary to include them with the cost of other articles, so that they may be acquainted with every expense.

He recollects, some years ago, of having two young ladies at the Salem Academy; at that time Mr. Kramet attended it; he wrote to the subscriber frequently, and each letter contained a statement of the young ladies' accounts, with what additional articles they might have had since he wrote the last: Therefore, by having reference to his last letter, a view was had of their accounts to that time. This led the subscriber to the above method, with what he considers a little amendment.

Those little attentions, although apparently of but little importance, when carefully attended to may prove to be of considerable advantage to the young ladies, and to the welfare of the Academy.

The Trustees are nicely attentive to the choice of their Tutresses, and as nicely attentive to the care of the young ladies; and in order that the business of the Academy may go on with success, they must be as attentive to the young ladies' expenses, which it is believed the above method will regulate.
