HOME.

At the present day much time and money is expended in pursuits, which ostensibly have the promotion of religion for their objects; and yet it is by no means uncommon, that many of those persons, who seem devoted to favorite schemes of religious improvement, employ too little of their labor in their own families. Their attention is alive to the events in the world around them, and to the method of usefulness which rarious societies suggest to them-but they seem entirety forgetful of what ought to be done at home. 'Home' is the best 'missionary ground," and one's own family the best of
