

MR. BUCHANAN'S LETTER.

other than General Jackson had proclaimed it. He would go into the Presidential chair, but never, no I never...

deposition of Bonaparte, either to the civil tyrannic and civil corruption of the Bourbons, or to the bloody despotism of such monsters as Robespierre, Maximilian and Danton...

MR. BUCHANAN'S LETTER. To the Editor of the Louisiana Journal. The Cincinnati Advertiser was last night placed in my hands by a friend, containing an address from General Jackson to the public...

very hair of his head. That if he believed his right hand, then know what his left would do, would cut it off and cast it into the sea...

MARSHAL BULLOW. Marshal Bullow, the Prussian General who brought up the army of reserve at Waterloo, and by whom the fate of that bloody day was decided...

Extract from Mr. M'Duffie's Speech, delivered at a Dinner in North Carolina. It is said by Mr. Clay that General Jackson is a "military chieftain," and that it would endanger the liberties of the country to elevate him to the chief civil office of the Republic.

I hear a voice exclaim Ambrister! As I presume it is from a constituent, it shall receive the most respectful attention. I thank you sir, for that word; for it furnishes me with an occasion to vindicate Gen. Jackson against one of many charges brought against him...

Some of the crowd here significantly observed that the usage of Ambrister is a subtle tone, which was evidently intended for the ear of M'Duffie, and was thus promptly noticed by him.

The following are the remarks of the Petersburg Intelligencer, a liberal, but decided, Administration paper, on the letter of Gen. Jackson: In preceding columns, we insert General Jackson's Reply to Mr. Clay's Address, published some weeks ago.

A young man in England, bitten by a mad cat, and on whom the hydrophobia had manifestly appeared, was cured by the cauterization of the salivary glands, by a red-hot iron.