Attempted Assassination of Charles X.

There is an account of an attempt to English, without vouching for his truth-The following is the article.

" Paris, Mirch 25 Charles X. was Funding to the forest of St. Germain ast. he tdraing of one of the avenues, his Majesty found himself in front of one of his Gardes du Corps, who had been placed there on duty, and who suddenly drew from his holsters a pistol, which he fired at his Majesty: The King was slightly wounded, and excessively terrified. The Garde du Corps, seeing that his aim had failed, destroyed himself, by drawing from he holster the remaining pistol, and plowing out his brains; first saving-" have missed you, but some other person will be more adroit than I." The greatest silence respecting this event was commanded, and the greatest precautions were taken to prevent its coming to the knowledge of the public. It was merely announced in the ministerial journals, that the King kept his room from indisposition, and the public never heard of the adventure.

France ... The King of France, says the N. York Advertiser of 16th inst. has resorted to a prorogation of the Chambers. This is another of those extreme, indeed we may say desperate measures, to which the French ministers have found hemselves compelled to resort, to avoid the concessions they are determined not to make to the wishes of the people.-The censorship, the restoration of the Jesuits, the sacrilege laws, and the dissolution of the late Chambers, have been successively tied, but were followed by a rapid accession of power to the liberal arry in the Chamber of Deputies, and a measure, all will be anxious to learn.

The anti-ministerial address of the hamber of Deputies, says the National Dazette, and the consequent prorogation of that body until September next, are mportant circumstances. Great agitation prevailed in Paris, and must have extended to the Departments :- a vast ties.-large groups of heated partisans assembled in the garden of the Tuiteries, appointed to carry the obnoxious address Cape Fear Bank .- A large and inter lengues. It is doubtful whether, by the deemed secure. We may presume that allow the Budget, or pecuniary supplies, was the immediate motive of the scheme of a prorogation. A loan will be necessary to enable the government to pursue the expedition against Algiers, for which the amplest preparations continued to be

The opposition papers affect to sneer at the election of the Jackson candidates for the Legistature from Hartford, in Connections; and tauntingly exclaim, that it is perfectly natural the Head-quarters of the Hartford conventionists should be a strong hold of Jacksonism! Now it is somewhat surprising they do not view this sign of the times in its true, light, for it bodes no good to the permanency of their principles. It was not the people of Hanford who were plotting treason against their country, in 1814; it was the traitorous leaders of the Fedassassinate the King of France, which the eral party, assembled there, from all parts of do do Cassimeres London Courier gives both in French and New England, and who sat in sec et conclave, sehamed to let the public know what their dark deeds were.
