Much has been said respecting the difficulty of rearing turkeys, it seems however, that a little care when fire hatched, soon places them beyond the reach of danger, and produces ampl profit. A lady at Moulton in Norfold in 1809, netted of the produce of one hen turkey, twelve guineas.

In Ireland turkeys are in abundance, so much so, that in the county of Con there is a fair kept for the sale of his keys. The warmth of the cabine, into which the fowls are always admitted, is exceedingly favourable to their increase, it renders them more prolife in eggs, and the young, by shating in the habitation of the family, can be reared with much greater case.
