

which make up the foreign commerce of the country—it did not satisfy them, that they themselves were not only exempted from all impositions by the Government, but actually received an indirect bounty from the impost laid upon other branches of industry, for the purposes of revenue. No, Sir; all this did not satisfy them; but they are now making a sure and steady, and for any thing that can be done here an irresistible progress in the system of legislative warfare, by which will be ultimately swept from the face of the ocean, a large and valuable branch foreign commerce, exclusively belonging to the staple growing States, and which now actually contributes two-thirds of the revenue of this Government. And this, Sir, is what they are pleased to dominate a system of protection.
