POETRY.

BTANZAS.

One sigh to the hope that bath perished, One sear to the wreck of the past ; One look upon all I have cherished, One linguring look - 'tis the last ! And now from remembrance I banish The hopes that my heart bath proved vain-Alt ! vanish dear memories, vanish !

But as the fond we clings closest To that which is withered and dead, And in its green beauty reposet. On the rain whose glory bath fied ; Thus to hopes and to joys that have failed, More family dath memory sling.

And o'er the fair prospects bath shided Its freshness and vividaces fling.

Return not so thrill me again.

The cloud that each moment is bright ning With the flash that so soon fadet away, In the darkest in heaven when the lightning Hath cented on its surface to play ;

Thus the heart, when one bright dream each minute Springs up with too darling a light,

Bath the gloom of the tempest within it. And is shrouded the soonest in night. ---

SPEED THE PLOUGH. Speed the plough! O, speed the plough! The sun is up, the time is now, Drive on, my boys, God speed the plough. Now the green blade, poeping low From the fast dissolving snow, Tells the gladdened farmer Low Heaven's aid can speed the plough. Harvest home! O, hear the sound, And each jocund tale go round; The proudest lord might envy now The merry man who guides the plough. The merchant's gold, the miser's board, The sailor's helm, the soldier's sword, The fup's affected sir, must bow To the rattling loom and gliding plough
