POETRY.

THOU DEEM'ST ME FALSE. Thou deem'st me false !- Well, be it so, Twere vain and uneless to repine : Thou deem'st me false-and heaven forbid, That I should blame one thought of thine! Phon deem'st me false-that now is still'd, The passion raging in my breast;-Well, be it so-if in thine own,

By memory bath aunk to rest. I would not wake again the thought, That once, perhaps, 'twas ill to cherish-Fis gone !- my hopes go with them too.

But they are left to perish! Thou deem'st me false! - No words of mice, The thought shall ever undeceive; will not cause thee to repine, I will not make thee grieve!

Live on, live on, and still believe Me talse, inconstant, as you will, You deem me fated to decrive, Live on, live on, and think so still ! The memory of my love will pass ! Like a bird in the air; Or fleet as the sands in the glass,

And not a trace be there.

Thus on thy heart, The thought of me may live but with a breath-Soon, soon to fade in the eternal death, And thus depart!

and thou again will join the throng, That Roat round pleasure's shrine ; And raise the laugh, and festive song, And not a care be thine. Thy cap shall be fill'd with the nectar of love. Which shall sparklingly flow to the brim, and its spirit be like the light wings of a dove And purity dwell therein.

But if, in after years, Memory should awaken Tears for him thou has forsaken, Let this reflection cheer thy heart, And consolation lend, That till life's springs depart, He is thy friend!

And memory shall hallow the thoughts of that hour,

And scenes of the past, again bring; Whilst capture shall cull for thee many a flower, And round thee their incense-breath fling : For joy shall be call'd e'en from that retrospec-

A pleasure may spring e'en from pain, Though the heart that will rise in thy fond recollection,

May never throb for thee again.

No Tariff of Prices. FREE TRADE.

Earthenware, Looking Glasses, &c. THOMAS J. BARROW, & Co. Importers, 88 Water-st. New-York. OFFER for sale, the largest and most com-China, plain and gill Looking Glasses, &c, which the New York market will afford, comprising every style and variety of the newest patterns. They return their most cordial thanks to their, friends in the Southern States, for their supportin the persecution now carrying on against them. for their refusal to join a combination in fixing one tariff of prices of Crockery, throughout the trade. It is mainly attributable to the influence of our Southern friends that we have been cuabled to survive thus far, in this most trying situntion; exposed to the combined influence and capital of the whole trade, endeavoring to effect our ruin and expulsion from business We pledge ourselves to our friends to give them every satisfaction in our power as regards the quality of our goods, the excellence of our packers and the lowness of our prices for Cash or City Acceptances; and in return, solicit from them a continuance of their patronage, and particularly request those who have influence with their friends to exert it in our behalf, as we trust the cause is one they are all interested in, and much benefit will accrue to us from their friendly act in this way. It has been said, the Combination was broken up. As it regards prices, this is true, and all, we think; friends or foes will allow that we have effected this change; but we do assure our friends, that at no period since we commenced our system of unshackled prices were we in greater want of assistance than at the present moment. This combination of men are leaving no means untried for effecting our ruin, that they may revive the old system; our credit and character are assailed in every shape, our importations waylaid and stopped in every instance where threats are sufficient to intimidate the manu acturers from supplying us; in fine, no vexation or trouble which the malice of men could de vise has been neglected in this struggle to subdue us. We once more call upon every friend of a free trade to come up to our support, and pledge ourselves to give them no cause to repent of their liberality. 6162 T. J. BARROW & Co.
