WHAT IS TIME? I asked an aged man, a man of years, wrinkled, and curly hair, white with hoary hair...

VARIETY.

Letting is all the go. 'I'll bet' said a physician—'But any son you please'—said his opponent, and 'I'll cover it'.

MATRIMONY.—A young lady of 23, lately throwing out some affecting sneers at matrimony; when a grave friend in company observed that marriages were made in heaven.

A modern writer thus enumerates the expression of the female eye:—'the glare, the stare, the leer, the invitation, the defiance, the denial, the consent, the glance of love, the flash of rage, the sparkling of hope, the languishment of softness, the squint of suspicion, the fire of jealousy, the lustre of pleasure.'

Contestacion.—The insolent civility of a proud man is, if possible, more shocking than his meanness can be; because he shows you by his manner, that he thinks it a mere condescension in him—and that his goodness alone bestows upon you—what you have no pretensions to claim.

Many people complain that the press sometimes does a great deal of mischief. This may be very true, for every printer has his devil; and it is admitted by every Ch. stir that the devil is the type of mischief.

A Mr. and Mrs. Trust, advertise to teach dancing in New York. We Trust they will have many pupils as their names are a most of attraction. They had better not teach the 'Cheat and 'Gall pads.'

During a heavy fall, a fellow who had taken a drop too much, happened to deposit himself under a water spout. He thus 'laying alone in his glory,' ever and anon exclaiming—'Not a drop more gentlemen—out a drop more.'

'Doctor, why have I lost my teeth?' inquired a talkative female, of a physician. 'You have worn them out with your tongue,' was the answer.

TAKE NOTICE LADIES.—No lady shall wear more than seven distinct colors in her dress at the same time—that being enough to form a rainbow. No lady shall wear coloured or clouded stockings with a white dress. No married lady shall appear in a pink bonnet. (We should like to extend this prohibition to ladies over fourteen.)

No lady, who hopes to be married, shall wear the hem of her gown above her heels. Ladies' Mag.

From the New York Globe. REPLY TO A BEAUTIFUL YOUNG LADY. 'The sleep of beauty on roses, is like the dew that hangs on the wall, or the dew that hangs on either repose, or when they are so soft than all.

ANECDOTES OF CURRAN.

Shortly after the Irish Cicero was raised to the dignity of the master of the rolls, he was invited to dine at the town residence of Sir Thomas Osborne, a gentleman of facetious and eccentric memory. The Banquet was famous for making long, but inelegant speeches in the House of Commons, and at public meetings. After dinner, when conversation commenced, a gentleman observed, that continual speaking must have the effect of making the voice husky and the mouth parched. All present assented to the truth of the remark, except Sir Thomas, who observed, 'Sir, I have spoken often for three hours together, without getting at all thirsty.' 'That may be, Sir Thomas,' said Curran, 'but are you sure that you did not get often dry?'

On another occasion the Aristophanes of the age, dining with Richard Jones, the manager of the Theatre Royal, the conversation happened to turn on the flourishing condition of the theatre at Sydney, Botany Bay, when Mr. Curran observed, with a keen and sly glance, at Judge Fletcher, who was present, 'Why the excellence of the performers is not at all a matter of wonder, as they have been selected, engaged and transported thither by excellent Judges.'

He had a black servant who served him faithfully for many years, and to whom, in consequence, the illustrious advocate was much attached. One morning after Mr. Curran had passed a jovial night at the Priory, a fashionable residence near Dublin, with Grattan, Lord Charlemont, Mr. Grace, Lord Avonmore, Dr. O'Leary, Mr. Flood, Judges Day, Finnean & Chamberlaine, and other gay monks of the scran, Caesar came up to his master's study, and with tears in his eyes and sorrow in the expression of his face, he humbly demanded his discharge. Mr. Curran, surprised at the request of a domestic to whom he was always very kind, anxiously inquired the reason that led Caesar to make it. 'Mars,' replied the servant, 'we would never leave you, but for de law of self-preservation—we cannot; me be very sorrow to tell so generous a man, I cannot live any longer with you, because I am losing my health, you make me laugh so much every night you have de friends of de Cork screen.'

Mr. Sheridan.—On being informed that a noted writer of damned tragedies, boasted in company, that he could never bring himself to laugh at the representation of the School for Scandal, the comic author satirically observed—'It is surely very ungrateful in him; for I never refused to laugh at his tragedies.'

The following extraordinary instance of the different effects of various vegetables, some of them poisonous, upon different animals, are mentioned by the Botanical Professor, in a recent lecture delivered at King's College.

'Horses,' says Mr. Burnett, will not touch cruciferous, but will feed on the reed grasses, amidst abundance of which goats have been known to starve; and these latter again will eat and grow fat on the water-henlock, which is a rank poison to other cattle. In like manner, pigs will feed on henbane, while they are destroyed by common pepper; and the horse, which avoids the bland turpentine, will grow fat on rhubarb, and take a drachm of arsenic daily with advantage.'

It was observed of a deceased lawyer, that he had left but few effects, to which a female remarked, that 'he had but few causes.'
