(the following article is going the rounds of the newspapers, as something creditable to the piety of the 18th century. We confess our mability to see in it any better than the most inexcuasable ignorance of the nature of our duty towards both our Heavenly Father and our fellow-men. Only think of a creature premining to dictate a pecuniary covenant with the great or of Heaven and Earth-He in whose hands are all the corners of the earth, and whose claim to all we even our lives—is indispotable!! It is monit is blasphemous; and we feel indignant that such a circumstance should be paraded before the world as an act pleasing to Almighty God, or creditable to the man who conceived it. We look upon the "pecuniary covenant" thus got up and formally signed by Mr. Cobb, as nothing more than a miserable attempt to bribe the "Lord of the whole earth" with silver and gold, in order that His favor might thus be propitiated until Mr. C. could accumulate-what? daily bread for himself and family, peace in the enjoyment of his religion. and a happy entrance into His rest at last !-- no, none of these !- but filthy lucre to the amount of fifty thousand dollars !- To those who think that the "Pearl of great price" is to be purchased by such means, we refer the case of Simon Magus, in the New Testament. CHARTER, whether in thought or deed, is a virtue that we greatly admire, and we wish to exercise it towards all men; but when we see its heavenly principle so deformed by ignorance of its first requirement, we cannot but express our horror of the perversion.

From the American Baptist Magazine. A CHRISTIAN MERCHANT OF THE 18th CEN-TURY.

The late Nathaniel R. Cobb, of the Baptist Church, Boston, (who early made himself a Life Director of the American Tract Society, by a donation of $175.) has left an example that honors the cause of Christ. Learning for a public profession he had not; but he had business talents, and with them he resolved to glorify

In November, 1821, at the age of twenty-three, two years after establishing himself in business, and a little more than one year after his marriage, he wrote and subscribed the following remarkable document, which may perhaps be termed

His Pecuniary Covenant with God: "By the Grace of God, I will never be worth more than $50,000.

"By the Grace of God, I will give one-fourth of the nett profits of my business to charitable and religious purposes.

"If I am ever worth $20,000, I will give one-half of my nett profits; and if I am ever worth $30,000, I will not profits; and if I am ever worth $30,000, I will not profit at the same at t give three-fourths, and the whole after $50,000. So help me God, or give to a more faithful steward, and "N. R. COBB. not me aside. "November, 1821."

To this Covenant, says the American Baptist Magazine, he adhered with conscientious fidelity. He distributed the profits of his business, with increasing ra-tio, from year to year, till he had reached the point he had fixed as the limit of his property, and then he gave to the cause of God all the money which he earned. At one time, finding that his property had increased beyond $50,000, he at once devoted the surplus, $7,500, dation for a Professorship in the Newton Theelogical Institution.

On his death bed he said to a friend, in allusion to the resolutions quoted above, "By the Grace of God— nothing else—by the Grace of God, I have been ena-bled, under the influence of these resolutions, to give away more than $40,000. How good the Lord has been to me?"

But Mr. Cobb did not wait till be had acquired $50,-000, before he began to devote his money to religious uses. It was in 1821, while he was yet young, and comparatively a poor man, recently established in buless, that he resolved to give one-fourth of the nett coneds of his business to benevolent purposes. It is then uncertain what abould be his success; but he was then uncertain what are all the with the resolution felt it to be his duty to begin then, with the resolution to increase the proportion if God should prosper him.

There are many Christians who think that if they could accumulate a certain sum, they would then be generous. They say that they must first make provi-sion for the meives and their families, and then they will distribute their money liberally. Mr. Cobb did not set thus. He, from the beginning, gave a large proportion of his income, and trusted in God that what-ever should be necessary for himself and family would AN EDITOR'S LIFE.

Readert you know but very little about the life of an Bittor; and it is not worth while for us to try to tell you what sort of a life he leads. Paper, ink, and types, cannot describe it. Pencil and paint may be essayed in vain. To know how an Editor lives, you must become as an Editor. But we say to you, as we have said to almost every one who has ever thought it worth while to advise with us apon the subject—do'nt try it, we breech you. FARE THEE WELL

I mourn thee-yet I do not weep I love three—yet my feelings sleep In silence as before. A common loss might tears bewail, And words might serve love's fancied tale, But never love like mine

I wronged thee, and the silken thread That bound our hearts in one, (Through years of grief and anguish fled,) Hast sever'd-thine is gone! No others in thy gentle eye

Love's tender truths may see, And I shall gaze like them-but spy No look of love for me.

The smiles that once were all'my own, Must be another's pride; And tears that flowed for me alone, Now flow for all beside, Nay, nay, I blame thee not !- the wrong.

Fault, folly-all are mine;
For thou hadst lived and suffered long, Ere change of soul was thine. Loved one! no tear is in my eye, Though pangs my bosom thrill; For I have learned when others sigh, To suffer, yet be still. Passion, and Pride, and Flattery strove, They made a wreck of me; But, ah! I never ceased to love, I never loved but thee!

My heart is with my early dream, And still thy influence knows, Still seeks thy shadow on the stream Of memory, as it flows; Still hangs o'er all the records bright,

Of moments brighter still, Ere love withdrew his starry light, Ere thou hadst suffered inl. Tis vain! 'tis vain! no human will

There's not a light on earth can fill Again Love's darken'd ura. 'Tis vain !—upon my heart, my brow, Broods grief no words can tell; But grief itself is idle now, Beloved one! Fare thee well!

Can bid that time return:

From the Philadelphia Gazette and Intelligencer. MESSES, EDITORS: I am one of those who think it ust as profitable to laugh as to cry; and though not altogether pleased with the result of the late elections, I am quite sure that a long phiz will not mend the mat-The follies of "the party" will afford lots of fum; and if ride si sapis is your motto as well as mine, we may, if you choose, ride together.

JACKSONISM. Now white and now sable, now foul and now fair; Now mild and now raving, now here and now there; More voices than Stentor; and still, to trepan us, Than Proteus more shapes, and more faces than Jan I'd bow to thy image—but how shall I make one! Thou now bear'st one form—and anon 'tis forsaken. Then now art a lion-Ah! hark to that roar! But look at those ears—thou art lion no more! Thou now art a hero, all stiff, grim, and awful, And now art a kitchen boy, cramming thy mawfull. E'en be what thou wilt-still I pledge thee my heart But, for pity sake, say what the d-I thou art !
