And such is the stream, by truth enlightened, That laves the breast by wisdom brightened, Where even the joys that the storm dissever, Are turned to gems that glow forever.

> There's a darkling tide In the Indian clime, By whose heardless side There's a sulphury slime-To the flower that it touches, A scorching wave,-To the bird that approaches, A weltering grave.

And such are the waters of bitterness rising In the desert bosom of dark disguising; And the birds of joy, and the flowers of feeling, Must perish wherever that wave is stealing.

From the London Herald. ADVENTURES OF A FEMALE SAILOR.

The following adventures of a young female, the subject of the present article, are so truly genuine, and so extraordinarily marvellous, that we cannot the attention of our readers. An incorrect stateearly part of the week, but the annexed account being publicly adduced before the Lord Mayor, leaves no doubt as to its authenticity. His lordship, having read the statement, directed M'Lean, the all the way. inspector of the city police, to make inquiry into the circumstances, in order that, if the girl requi- injury? red assistance, it might be rendered to her without informing him of her intention. By degrees she became reconciled to the labors of her new employment, but she beheld with joy the shores of New York, where she thought her labors would terminate. The moment she landed, she went off in the cabin boy's dress, to the house of Captain Burke's father, and said that she had worked under the captain's orders and wished to be engaged by him again. It was by the father of the young man that she was informed of the event which placed the eternal barrier between them, and she retired from the house disconsolate. America was, however, no place to look for sympathies. In the belief that the sea, which no doubt her affection for Burke recommended to her, was a more probable mode of existence than she could adopt in the dress of her sex, she applied for and obtained a situation as cook and steward in the Adelaide, and subsequently in the Rover, in which latter vessel she sailed to St. Andrew's, where she fell in with Capt. M'Entire. The Captain of the Rover had engaged to take her to Belfast, but he received an order from the owner to sail for the West Indies; and, as she was resolved to return to her father as soon as possible, she refused to accompany him .--For 31 months she had been engaged in these remarkable adventures, and participated in the most severe toils of the crews, of which she formed part. He accordingly appeared be- last person in the vessel who was informed of the fore the Lord Mayor, accompanied by the girl, the fact, and I could scarcely credit the mate when he captain of the vessel in which she came to London, told me of it. I can bear testimony to the extraand several gentlemen who felt an interest in the ordinary propriety of her conduct, and I ask her remarkable details of the fact.

Captain M'Entire, of the Sarah, from Belfast, stated that he met the girl, whose name is Anne Jane Thornton, at St. Andrew's, in North America. She was dressed in sailor's clothes, and had all the appearance of having been brought up to that employment. He engaged her, at 9 dollars a month, to act as cook and steward, and considered that she was what he seemed to be, until a few days before the arrival of the vessel in the port of London. It appeared that some of the crew had suspected her, before she was seen washing in her edly refused to drink grog.

The Lord Mayor .- It has been reported that she was ill treated by her captain and the crew .- circumstances of danger and toil as you have been I wish particularly to be informed upon the point.

Captain M'Entire said that he would call upon the girl to say whether he had not uniformly treat. tlemen to whom I have spoken on the subject, looked her with kindness ? and whether, when her sex ed upon the case as the coinage of the brain, but was not increased ?

The girl declared that Capt. M'Entire had acted towards her with humanity; and had desired that the proprietor of the Coopers' Arms, in Lowher to complain to him if any of the crew treated her harshly. She had been, in the course of the voyage, struck by some of the sailors, because she could not work as hard as they did-a thing she found it difficult to do in a gale of wind; but she did not tell the captain, as she determined to endure as much as possible without grumbling.

The Lord Mayor .- Is it possible that this mere girl-for she cannot be more than sixteen or seventeen years of age-performed the duties of a seaman
