The language of flowers is so elegant an emblem, that we select a few of the most interesting emblems for the gratification of our fair readers. Beauty—The Rose.—This queen of flowers is the pride of Flora, and the emblem of beauty in every part of the globe.

The following is an extract from a forthcoming work of Dr. Peters, the discoverer of the celebrated "Vegetable Anti-Bilious Pills."

"HEALTH, wealth, and enjoyment, are the three prime objects of life. The two former are only sought as a means to obtain the latter. Man seeks for wealth as a means of enjoyment. But vain is such pursuit without the possession of health."

But say that a man could obtain wealth—that he could acquire the gold of Ophir, and bring home all the treasures of the mines of Golconda, yet without health, where would be his happiness! He would be miserable in the midst of his gold and his diamonds; he would pine away in wretchedness and despair; and he would exclaim with the wise man of old, "All is vanity and vexation of spirit!"

"I would give a thousand dollars for your appetite," said the rich man, as he handed the hungry one a dollar. Of so much importance is health to the enjoyment of life.

"But wherefore, methinks I hear the reader ask, subscribe this humbly on so plain and hackneyed a subject? Do we not all know the value of health? Do we not all attend to it as one of the chief, if not the chiefest concerns of our mortal existence? Do we not employ the means to attain and preserve it? Do we not follow the advice of our physicians? Do we not follow their prescriptions?"

Very true, Doctor—men do not as you say, always pursue the right road to health. Now, I know of some people who are always doing themselves with physic, and running to the doctors and apothecaries every day of their lives. They take, I verily believe, a cart-load of drugs in a year, and yet they are not well after all. Do you know the reason?

"You are right informed, Dr. Peters is no empiric. He does not undertake what he does not understand. He was regularly bred to the healing art. He has had years in the acquisition of knowledge, he has the science himself to the study of the human frame, and the diseases to which it is subject, and now he is applying his attainments to the relief of suffering humanity."
