

Carolina Watchman.

VOL. IV.—THIRD SERIES.

SALISBURY N. C., JULY 10, 1873.

NO. 43.—WHOLE NO. 883.

The World Astonished. THE AMERICAN

Button-Hole, Overseaming AND COMPLETE SEWING MACHINE

The first and only BUTTON-HOLE AND SEWING MACHINE combined that has made its advent in any other country.

The following reasons are given why this is the best:
1. Because it will sew any fabric that can be sewed on any other machine.
2. Because it will sew any button-hole that can be sewed on any other machine.
3. Because it will sew any overseam that can be sewed on any other machine.
4. Because it will sew any seam that can be sewed on any other machine.
5. Because it will sew any hem that can be sewed on any other machine.
6. Because it will sew any collar that can be sewed on any other machine.
7. Because it will sew any pocket that can be sewed on any other machine.
8. Because it will sew any cuff that can be sewed on any other machine.
9. Because it will sew any waistband that can be sewed on any other machine.
10. Because it will sew any skirt that can be sewed on any other machine.
11. Because it will sew any dress that can be sewed on any other machine.
12. Because it will sew any suit that can be sewed on any other machine.
13. Because it will sew any coat that can be sewed on any other machine.
14. Because it will sew any blouse that can be sewed on any other machine.
15. Because it will sew any shirt that can be sewed on any other machine.
16. Because it will sew any pair of trousers that can be sewed on any other machine.
17. Because it will sew any pair of pants that can be sewed on any other machine.
18. Because it will sew any pair of drawers that can be sewed on any other machine.
19. Because it will sew any pair of socks that can be sewed on any other machine.
20. Because it will sew any pair of shoes that can be sewed on any other machine.

No other Machine can accomplish the kind of sewing stated in Nos. 3, 4, 5, and 6.

Parties using a family sewing machine want a Whole Machine, one with all the improvements.

It is to last a LIFETIME, and therefore one is wanted that will do the most work and do it the best; and this machine can do several kinds of sewing not done on any other machine, besides doing every kind that all others can do.

The American or Plain Sewing Machine. (Without the button-hole part), does all that is done on the Combination except button-hole and overseaming.

MEBONEY & BRO., Agts. Salisbury N. C.

Examine them before purchasing any other Sewing Machine.

Do not hesitate to say the American Combination surpasses all other machines. Besides doing all the work that all other machines can do, it will sew button-holes in any fabric, from Swiss muslin to Beaver cloth. It has used Singer's Sledge Hammer, and it will sew the American far superior to them all.

I have used six different Sewing Machines. The American surpasses them all.

I have used the Singer and other machines and would not exchange the American for any.

MEBONEY & BRO., Agts. American Com. S. M. Wilson, Sewing & Upholstery, 100 N. 3rd St., Philadelphia, Pa.

We have seen some advertisements and heard much said by Agents of other machines. We will forfeit one hundred dollars to the contrary, if after a trial before competent judges, in preference to any other machine, it is not truly recommended as the best machine made. It is simple, runs light and does not get out of order or drop out of gear.

We have been Agents for Sewing Machine since 1866 have sold Singer's Sewing Machine and other machines, and have abandoned all others.

Send me a sample of No. 1. No. 40-1.

MEBONEY & BRO., Agts.

WHAT THE BOSTON POST THINKS ABOUT 'MUZZLING THE PRESS.'

When Senator Carpenter launches his denunciation at the free press of the country, and phantastically complains because it is free, he echoes the spirit of the Administration in Louisiana, where its supporters are engaged in making war through the courts upon the last refuge of popular liberty.

For commenting at the time of the election upon the conduct of Jacob Hawkins, a member of the Board of Censors, as he deserved, that individual brought an action for libel against the New Orleans Picayune, laying his damages at $100,000. The case was brought on the bench directly to the fraudulent tribunal of the Hawkins Board. Thus a Judge assumed to try the case who was interested in its issue as was Hawkins; and as the law of Louisiana all with the intention to prove, if possible, the truth of the libel in justification, his presence on the bench was a sufficient guarantee of the predetermined result. In prosecuting the plaintiff Judge Lynch would only be protecting himself. Hawkins and his Board were denounced for being guilty of the grossest fraud, in returning a verdict as elected who never had been elected, and a Judge holding his seat by the very process denounced, sits in judgment upon the denunciation. He not only sided with the case, but he bullied the jury back to acquiescence when they reported their inability to agree, threatening them with perpetual imprisonment if they did not find a verdict, and at last silencing several of the jurors who subsequently protested that they succeeded only to suppress force. Six negroes, four Kellogs men and two Democrats, composed the intelligent jury. The Picayune's only course, it is evident, was to establish the truth of the allegations contained in the offensive matter charged as libellous. To do this it was necessary to prove the false swearing of Hawkins as a member of the Board of Censors. But Judge Lynch peremptorily refused to let the counsel attempt it. He would not suffer him to show how the pretended returns were made up. He denied him the use of the very witnesses upon whom the Picayune relied. He refused to let Hawkins himself be put upon the stand for the defendant. He would not even suffer the cross-examination of the plaintiff's witnesses, and his rulings from first to last were audaciously partial and infamous. Finally the Judge abruptly told the Picayune's counsel that he was occupying too much time in discussing the admissibility of evidence, and gave notice that branch of the defence should terminate. And after suppressing everything that could be relied upon by the defendant as evidence, the jury were severely charged and retired. Their first impulse was to give Hawkins seventy-five thousand dollars damages, but they disagreed, came back into court, and were again hustled out by the bench, and at length, after four hours' further deliberation, came to a conclusion. As they polled one of them desired to make an explanation; whereupon Judge Lynch vociferated: "We do not want any excuses"; and another jury exclaimed: "Well, Judge, they for us and we had to give in." And Judge Lynch sat and received a verdict rendered under pressure, an occurrence unheard of in the history of Louisiana jury trials. But this was not the worst of this scandalous work. When descending to the jury room the second time, the errand and deputy sheriff, appointed just before by Judge Lynch, slipped into hand of a juror a paper thus inscribed: "Your friend on Charles street has $500 for you, if you will give with the majority." The verdict was for $18,000 damages to Hawkins. Here, then, is justice and the Kellog usurpation in Louisiana. It is certainly without a parallel in this country. It was Hawkins who elected Kellog, precisely as he elected Lynch. Durell only recognized the Hawkins fraud, and the Marshal called upon the President to enforce the decree. That the President is just as responsible for this flagrant outrage on common justice and decency as he is for Kellog, through Durell and Packard, need no assertion. The whole combination is bent on breaking down a free press, and Senator Carpenter simply disclosed the ominous secret.

THE MONSTER'S TABLE.

There exists in Paris a cheap table d'hote for the reception of strange guests. It goes by the name of The Monster's Table. All those unfortunate prisoners who live by the display of their physical infirmities come here to dine together and avoid the attention they would elsewhere attract.

The skeleton man pours out the cigar and the Nôman giantess sits with Riquet a la houppe, and the Sugar Loaf, whose pointed head is more than eighteen inches from the crown to the chin, sits smoking with the King of the animals, so-called from his coating of fur. Made up Monsters are excluded from the symposium; so are strangers, and it is said that intruders have met with such a warm reception from the hideous shapes assembled round the board that they left, on making their escape, as though they had just been released from Dante's "Inferno." The French journal which describes the dreary assembly adds some information "not generally known." These monstrosities, it observes, are seldom natural, but are the work of "English specialists" who turn out these sad spectacles in order at the bidding of the United States Government.

This revelation ought to produce national humiliation and indignation, if anything. This comes of reading "L'Homme Qui Rit."

VOUDOU.

Voodoo Festival in New Orleans—A Distinguishing Orque—The Queen and Her Court.

NEW ORLEANS, June 24.—Last night the annual Voodoo festival of the negroes was held along the borders of the Bayou St. John and the Old Lake. A more distinguishing sight has never been my lot to witness. An immense number of men and women congregated in the evening at particular places, and at a given signal they all divested themselves of their clothes to actual nakedness. Buffets were built all along the shores of the lake, and the whole appearance was such as would almost strike terror into a stout heart. The horrid orgies were inaugurated by one wild, uncouth yell, in which all the assembled crew joined their voices, and for a moment afterwards there was a fearful silence. The worshippers of the demon then contemplated their naked forms, upon which the fire shone with a ghastly effect, and with a hideous yell they began to dance around the fires, singing weird songs and occasionally bursting forth into a wild and piercing laugh. The songs that they sang could not be identified with any living language, but seemed to be a communion of language, German and French. Around these bonfires they kept revolving with joined hands for over an hour and a half without ceasing, uttering their horrid yells and singing their weird songs. On all occasions a woman presides over these orgies, under the name of "Queen of the Voodoo," and when they cease dancing round the fires they go forward and make their submission at Her Majesty's feet, who is usually seated on an elevated mound or a large rock. This Queen retains her title and dignity during life, provided she conducts things with a proper grace, and she is usually chosen out of the most socially elevated class of negroes in the locality. On this occasion the old queen, Marie Lavody, did not attend on account of illness, and her emblem of power, a garland of flowers round the head, was worn by one Mammy Caroline, who has already been named and acknowledged as the successor to the queenly dignity. After the first part of the performance was over, Queen Caroline held her court in an old house on the banks of the bayou, where she shone forth in all the splendence of her nude beauty. I saw with regret, that these degrading orgies were participated in by a young white girl, about eighteen years of age, and possessed of more than ordinary beauty. This ludicrous revel was prolonged till late a hour at night, but its sickening and disgusting character forbids me entering into more minute details. I imagine several hundred negroes in an Atlantic condition, a dingy, yellow, and singing all night around the numerous buffets that were lighted on the banks of the bayou.

A ROYAL RASCAL.

Prince Charles, of Leiningen, Convicted of Theft and Forgery.

Prince Charles, of Leiningen, a not very distant relative of Queen Victoria, was convicted at Mannheim, in Germany, on the 19th of April last, of theft and forgery, and sentenced to a brief term of imprisonment in the penitentiary. The Prince is a fine-looking man, about thirty years of age. During ten years he has been through with a fortune of 1,000,000 florins, visited every country on the globe, and has been a guest of the Queen at Windsor Castle, until his extravagance finally utterly ruined him, caused him to commit suicide, and sent him to a convict's cell. His cousin, Prince George, of Leiningen, is a member of Queen Victoria's household, and among the correspondents of the press, and was found autographing letters from most of the sovereigns of Europe. About ten years ago Prince Charles set out on a journey round the world. He visited North and South America, and upon his return published a volume of sketches, several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French ballet girl, named Petrella Jonova, who soon helped to get through with the remainder of his fortune. When he had nothing left, the heartless woman deserted him, and the prince became very poor. His relatives almost disowned him, and when he was absolutely on the brink of starvation, they settled several chapters of which were devoted to New York and Boston. He next took up his abode in Paris, where he was connected with the Count de Grammont Caderousse and other young spendthrifts, and, like them, became a confirmed gambler. In 1866 he had barely 100,000 florins left, and returned to Baden, his native country. His family tried to make him marry the daughter of a wealthy nobleman, but he abruptly married a French