Bailey, Esqr., appearing for the State, and J. M. McCorkle, Chas Price, and Jno. E. Brown, Esqrs., appearing for the defendant. A large number of witnesses from Davie and Davidson, were examined, principally as to character, and we have never seen so many bad characcontemplate. Holland swore positively that he had not signed the mortgage, but it was in proof that Phillips had brought suit upon it and that Holland had run off and sold the identical two mules which it covered, when legal process was sought to be served upon him. These facts told strongly against the probability that the signature was a forged one. The speech of Mr. J. M. McCorkle in this case was one of that gentleman's very finest efforts, and would have done credit to any Bar. It was clear, logical, eloquent, and in its showing-up of the prosecutor, his motives and character, absolutely crushing. Mr. Bailey made a powerful speech for the prosecution, which for force of invective, vehemence of denunciation, excelled. We were not so fortunate as to hear Messrs. TRAGIC BRIDAL TOUR .- About a week go Maurice Goodrich and his brother William, of Worchester, N. Y., were married in that village to two sisters. The brothers, as well as the sisters, were twins. On Wednesday last, to complete their wedding trip, the two couples went to Unadilla to visit the tamily of Joseph Morehouse, whose wife was a sister of the newly married ladies. On Thursday morning the bridal party and Mr. and Mrs. Mourhouse went boat riding on the Susquehanna at Uuadilla.-William Goodrich took the oars, and while rowing the ladies became frightened, the boat was capsized and the entire party thrown into the water. Mr. Morehouse, being an old sailor and an expert swimmer, tried to support his wife and Mrs. Maurice Goodrich. The women, however, threw their arm about him, and the three sank and were drowned. Maurice Goodrich swam a few fect, but being weighed down with heavy clothing was also drowned, William Goodrich before begining to row had removed his coat. He was a good swimmer and saved his wife. The bodies of Mr. and Mrs. Mourhouse and Maurice Goodrich were recovered the same day, but that of the latter's wife had not been found at last accounts.
