Constancy. Down through the orchard wandered we, Where, bending low, each burdened tree, Hang full of fruitage yellow, 'Twas morning, and the autumn sun shone on the leaves of gold and dun With radiance soft and mellow.

OUR VILLAGE VISITOR.

She landed at the one hotel of our quiet village, on a Saturday morning. We noticed her, particularly because she was alone, because she was a stranger, and because she was very pretty.

Later, as the landlord politely escorted her to the supper-rooms, she informed him that she had heard of his house—that it was quiet and well-kept, and that she had come for a short rest and respite from the din and turmoil of the great city.

"As I am alone, and a stranger, I ought, perhaps, to say just a word of myself. My mother is not living—My father and I have lately returned from an European tour, and I have sought this quiet retreat while he prepares our house in Philadelphia.

The good host was grateful for the information, and very glad the young lady had honored his house with her presence. He would do what he could to make her stay comfortable and agreeable.

Very soon Miss Dubois became acquainted with the guests of the house and proved herself as intelligent and entertaining as she was pretty. She played well upon the piano-forte, but did not sing. She played chess, too, though there was only one party in the house to play it with her.

The days passed on, and Miss Dubois walked much in and about the village. She seemed interested in the place, and spoke favorably of all that she saw. Her usual walking-habit was a dress of black silk, and a jaunty Swiss hat, and very few men met her on the street who did not turn to take a second view.

Boarding at the hotel was Mr. Aaron Huntley. He kept the principal store in the village, and was also our postmaster. He was a man of five-and-forty, rotund and good-looking, and had been a widower ten years.

merchant was her favorite. With him she went to a picnic, and with him she went to church, where she was among the most devout of the worshippers.

Yes, she was certainly fond of the company of Mr. Huntley, and it is not to be wondered at that he should become fond of her. She was pretty, she was witty, she was intelligent, and she had strong common sense; and, furthermore, she was young and buoyant.

One evening Aaron Huntley came from the parlor, where he had been playing chess, radiant. He had proposed, and had been accepted. He managed to keep the sweet, blessed secret, four-and-twenty hours, and then he let it out to the landlord, and was congratulated. The store-keeper was happy.

"Of course," whispered Clara, with her head resting upon Mr. Huntley's shoulder, "we cannot be married until my father comes. I have written to him, and told him all."

Yes—he knew she had written, for on that very day he had mailed the letter, addressed to "COL. CHARLES H. DUBOIS, Philadelphia, Pa."

"And," pursued Clara, with emotion, "I know he will like you. He has been a kind and indulgent papa to me."

"I hope he will like me, darling." "Oh, I know 'he will. You will be content to wait till he comes?" "Yes, though it is happiness deferred."

"Ah! Aaron, do you think you will always love me as now?" "Always, dearest!" And he pressed her to his bosom in the exuberance of his affection.

After this, Miss Dubois was much at the store, and in her playful happy way, she assisted often in the post-office, which was a square room partitioned off, in one corner of the building.

And so the days went on, and Aaron Huntley was certainly the happiest man in the village. But one morning a thunder-clap fell upon him. He went to his store, and found the rear door ajar. He went to his safe and found that it had been opened, and the money taken—the savings of years!

In anticipation of his marriage, Mr. Huntley had thought of purchasing a house, and had drawn five thousand dollars from the bank in a neighboring town for that purpose. Then he had three thousand dollars laid aside for the purchase of goods for the fall trade; and in addition to this there had been about two thousand dollars of government money in his keeping.

It was just at the close of a postal quarter, and the post-master of several adjacent villages, having no safes of their own, had entrusted their returns to his hands. So that full ten thousand dollars had been stolen from the safe.

For a time Huntley was like one distracted, but he had sense enough to make his loss known at once to the deputy sheriff, and the officer, with a posse was soon on the search. It had been an adroit robbery, and in the outset the searchers had no possible clue. Both the lock of the door and the lock of the safe must have been picked by skillful hands, for neither of them was injured in the least.

Miss Dubois was early at the store, and when she heard of her lover's loss she endeavored to console him. "Don't worry, dearest," she said. "When my father comes I can help you. If this loss cripples you, it shall only be for a time."

Dubois took Mr. Huntley's arm, and retired to the parlor, and presently afterwards the white-haired man named Dr. Bumpus, followed them. The first two had seated themselves upon a sofa, and the latter took a seat in a chair between them and the door, and, at the same time, a stout, dark-faced man, in a free-and-easy suit of red flannel, had stopped upon the threshold, and was standing in the open door-way.

Miss Dubois saw these two men—saw the positions they had taken—and her teeth came together with a snap, and her lips were compressed and pale.

"Sir," she said, addressing the white-haired man, "you stare at me as though you had met me before." And as she spoke her right hand stole down by her side toward the pocket of her dress.

"Look, my dear, and see if you don't remember me." With this the white wig was lifted off, the green spectacles and the white beard removed, revealing a compact, sinewy, keen-eyed man, of about forty.

On the next instant Miss Dubois had a pistol in her hand, and was cocking it; but the man in the chair, and the man at the door, had both been watchful of her. They were upon her before she could do any mischief, and after a sharp, furious struggle—a struggle in which the two strong men had severe work to do—a pair of ratchet irons were upon her wrists.

Mr. Huntley for the second time that day had been thunder-struck—so completely struck that all power of defending his promised wife was lost to him, and he did not even recover his power of speech until the ignoble irons had been snapped upon her wrists.

"In the name of mercy," he at length gasped, "why do you treat a lady thus?" "A lady! That's good! Say, you are Aaron Huntley, ain't ye?" "Yes, sir."

"And was robbed last night?" "Yes, sir."

"Well, I am Captain Joyce, of the New York detective force, and this fair companion of yours has been giving me considerable of a waltz lately, as he can tell you."

"Yes, sir,—He. Didn't you ever hear of one John Roper, otherwise called Liverpool Jack?" "I have read in the papers of a big reward having been offered for Liverpool Jack," answered Mr. Huntley, wondering.

"Well," returned Captain Joyce, "have we him, as large as life, and he would be full as natural if it wasn't for his feminine masquerade. O, he's a keen one, he is, sir; but I fancy he'll sing him a song of Sing Sing now, and if I ain't greatly out, we'll find your lost money for you."

And so Aaron Huntley lost a wife; but he regained his ten thousand dollars, though it was a long, long time before he regained anything like his old pride and self-conceit; for he had, indeed, for four weeks, been wasting the love of his tender heart upon one of the most accomplished rogues that ever crossed the Atlantic into America.—N. Y. Ledger.

ARREST OF A COUNTERFEITER. On last Monday evening, U. S. Deputy Marshal N. W. McElroy, of Madison, brought to Asheville jail, Samuel Bennett, who is charged as being a counterfeiter.

It seems that this is the second arrest that has been made of Bennett. The first time he was arrested, he was caught while in the act of passing a counterfeit bill, between sundown and dark, during the last term of the court of Yancey county, but upon giving a bond of $1,000 for his appearance at court was released.

He failed, however, to make his appearance at court, and his security, W. A. Paterson, seeing that he was responsible for the amount of the bond, had been using every possible means for his arrest, but not until last Saturday had he been successful. When first seen he was in a house, but seeing Paterson approaching, attempted to run, but not being swift enough on foot, was soon overtaken; and while in the act of climbing a fence, Paterson struck him over the head with a rifle gun, which felled him to the ground, after which he was bound and delivered to the officer.

The manner in which he was alleged to have been carrying on the counterfeiting, is remarkably peculiar. It appears that a one dollar bill is taken, and so transfigured as to bear the resemblance of a ten dollar note, and we are reliably informed that he had succeeded in defrauding several parties in Yancey county in this manner.—Asheville Expositor.
