AGRICULTURE. - A correspondent of the New York World says, agriculture is emphatically the thing upon which mainly depends a nation's prosperity. Yet, strange hs it may seem, its thorough study and development has been left for ages far behind the most unimportant of arts The only direct effort towards reducing it to a perfect science has been made within the last fifty years. It is now progressing with gigantic strides, but even now there are comparatively few who give heed to the many important faots relative for agriculture that are daily coming to light ; hosts there are who treat with fidicule every experiment made by the searcher after facts. But the world i moving in the right direction, and, as a consequence, agriculture must soon be recognized as the calling of the learned, and the leading calling of the country, 17 H ....
