

ALLEAN.

BY WHO? My dear Allean 's a handsome maid...

There, every feature wears a smile, That speaks directly to the heart...

And on those smiles, bright sparkling wit, Comes dancing forth to mock at care...

Yes, I recall their magic spell, And every thought they've brought to mind...

But yet, alas! for me, this maid, And her sweet smiles, they've ruined me...

Even now, tho' absent, her bright eye, With lily cheeks of crimson hue...

A purer being ne'er did live, And it were wrong to think there can...

I like her unassuming ways— Her smiling traits of cheeriness...

And you my heart, exalt thy strain, And now leap forth thy loudest note...

But what should she yield up her breath, And angels claim her for their own...

But hush, my heart: should she go free To roam the flowery fields of bliss...

Indeed, she is the only tie, That now doth bind me fast to earth...

Then speed the hour, make haste the day, When perfect all shall be and pure...
