poll tax on account of both poverty and This latter section, we take it, gives the from prosecution those who are known to be unable to pay the tax. There is no question of the propriety of enforcing the law in all cases where the parties are able to pay, but it will do the county no good to prosecute those from whom there is no prospect of realizing the money, even though it may be justly due. The design of the law is to put funds into the county treasury, and prosecution in such cases as referred to will have just the opposite Cullom, of the counsel for the defence, tendency .- Wil.
