Narrow Escape. The young ladies. Caughters of Mr. John D. Brown, fortuhately prevented a dreadful fire at their festiteine one evening last week. They were starting to church and were outside the gate when they discovered an unusually large light in the dressing room they had just left, and quickly returning were just in time to do good service. Some light articles of dress had somehow come in contact with the gas, and was rapidly spreading. Damage $25 or $30. Insured.

fitted to her work that my friend could hardly believe she was the person. It expressed, as she phrased it, to much "culture." She proved, however, to be the woman superintendent of the upholstery department of one of our most famous and fashionable furniture and decorating houses, and lightly climbed a sten-ladder and proceeded, in a workmanlike way to get on the outside of a window in the furtherance of the object she had to accomplish. My friend, who is a lady of observation and intelligence, became very much interested in her, and noticing a plain gold ring on her finger, asked if she tice of his profession at Oakland, the city were married.

"No.thank God." was the reply. "Why are you thankful that you not married ?" asked Mrs. H. "Because I have two sisters who are married," she said, "and I have to work, not only to support myself and my mother, but to how he made a fortune at that corner in feels not the approach of disease in the feeling help support their children."

And then the correspondent goes on to prefer this heavy charge against the young men of his acquaintance : Few men marry now-a-days with any intention of fulfilling their natural obligations and properly supporting a wife and family. When they are not ancient widowers who can afford to buy a young privilege on Sunday next. girl as a luxury for their old age, they are generally thoughtless and selfish young men, who would rather be taken care of than forced to assume any responsibility The majority, who are capable of earning a living, do not even contemplate mar riage. The clubs offer them the "com forts of home," and they prefer to spend their money on themselves. This is well enough so far as they are individually concerned, until they have reached the heart, it may be, how his hopes had been age when a personal sympathy and com panionship are worth more than anything else in the world, and they begin to regret their lost opportunities,

How far is that allegation true of Southern young men? Not to any great extent, we hope. But it is easy for a man to answer for himself, whether he is of the class of drones or dependents or one of those upon whom natural dependents may lean with safety to themselves.
