

I asked him if, in working on his memoirs, he preferred the morning hours for his literary task. He said that he did not; that he could work better evenings and was, in fact, a late riser. "I got enough of early rising in the army in my younger days," he added. The manual labor of writing was, he remarked, distasteful to him, and he sought relief in dictation, although his thoughts came faster than the pen of his amanuensis could secure them. "The only person who could ever write fast enough for me," he said, "was my chief clerk when I was Secretary of War. He disliked composition and I equally disliked writing. We were, therefore, the complements of each other." The little library in the gallery is arranged very conveniently. A pavilion midway up the shelves makes it easy, by means of a step-ladder, to handle books on the topmost shelves. The large library which Mr. Davis possessed before the war was dispersed, the books in many cases being scattered through the woods. All of his present collection are newly acquired. The lower shelves are laden with the Congressional Globe—an imperfect set, Mr. Davis remarked—and the "American Archives." Above are biographies in great number and political histories, hand books, &c. Early in the afternoon lunch was served in the little library. While we ate Mr. Davis talked pleasantly of men and events in by-gone days. He has that rare cheerfulness of humor which communicates itself to his auditors, and has besides a quietly witty turn. What was said by Mr. Davis regarding current politics I am not at liberty to repeat. But I may say that none of Mr. Davis' judgments of men and things were tinged with bitterness. He seems to discuss politics from the surer heights of philosophical statesmanship. He is tolerant of all opinions, while earnestly believing in the doctrine of State rights. Without the States there could, he said, be no Union, and in local self-government all our safety lies.

Regarding certain matters which were discussed in the course of the day, I am privileged to speak. I asked him if he thought the negro exodus would assume formidable dimensions. He said he did not attribute exaggerated importance to the movement, nor did he think it a trifling matter. The negroes are credulous and easily led. Those who have gone to Kansas will probably return, if they have the means; others think they will remain only to die in that cold country. Some of his negro laborers on his Mississippi River plantation went to Kansas, in the outset of the "exodus." They had asked his opinion of Kansas, and he had told them of its rigorous climate, but had said to them, if they felt it to be for their best good to leave, to go rather to a warmer region.

Mr. Davis said that there was a great deal of excellent land in Mississippi belonging to the State and General Government, which the negroes might buy very cheaply. He believes that, apart from the white man, the negro will cease to thrive, and will relapse into barbarism. The races need each other. Mr. Davis remarked that it was impossible for a man who had been reared apart from the negro to have that same affection for him as is felt by Southern men, who have in childhood been nursed by negroes, been the playmates of negroes and grown up with them.

On Mr. Davis' estate are pomegranate, citron and orange, and fig trees, their condition sufficiently testifying to the geniality of the climate.

The people of the region all look healthy and even rugged. The gulf affords an inexhaustible supply of fish and there are excellent oysters in profusion.

One word of the master of the estate at Beauvoir before I close. Mr. Davis, although I found him temporarily indisposed, has good general health. He takes a "constitutional" on horseback daily and is a good pedestrian. He told me that since he had left his plantation on the Mississippi and come to the coast his health had improved. When he was in Congress he spent his winters in Washington and his summers on the river. He thus reversed the true sanitary rule and malaria attacked his system. His sojourn in Canada benefited him greatly.

Mr. Davis believes the negro alone to be permanently capable of out-door work in a hot climate. The negro thrives amid miasma and in swamps. Mephitic gases that would kill a white man do not harm the negro. When the negro sleeps he pulls the bed-clothes over his head, and all night breathes gases which would render a white man sick, if not insensible.

I noticed the kindly manner in which Mr. Davis addressed his black servants. They show in their physique and dress the care of a kind and liberal master, and the people of that region tell me that he is much beloved and venerated by his servants.

ADJOURNMENT JUNE 10TH.

The ways and means committee to-day agreed to report Wood's resolution fixing the date of adjournment for June 10th.

Carolina Watchman.
THURSDAY, MAY 29, 1879.

JUDGE SCHENCK.
This gentleman, so generally a favorite wherever he presides, has been holding our Superior Court for nearly two weeks. We are very glad to be able to say, that in the discharge of his duties, he has given universal satisfaction. Indeed, we are reminded of the old times, when to be a Superior Court Judge in North Carolina was an honor, and a high one too, when we see the manner of Judge Schenck, in his administration of the law. Courteous to all, he is as firm and decided as a Caldwell or Saunders. Not a moment of the public time is lost or uselessly expended in hearing frivolous objections of counsel.

We are informed that this court will cost the county less than any held here since the war. The Grand Jury was discharged several days earlier than usual, and this of itself is an item of no little importance.

We have been prompted to say this much of Judge Schenck because he deserves it as a faithful public servant.

Our contemporary of the Hillsboro Recorder, has undertaken to correct the false reports put in circulation by the northern dailies concerning the execution of the Chapel Hill robbers. It is a very difficult task, as they can and will, easily tell six falsehoods while he is correcting one. Exaggeration and misrepresentation is more the trade of the northern dailies than telling the simple truth.

The New York Observer of the 27th, tells a very amusing story of a young man, the editor met on a street car, whose special business in connection with one of the leading city dailies was to write up exaggerations; and the fellow by way of explaining his business more fully, opened one of the papers he had in his hand, and showed what he had got up about the rats of Japan. Said he didn't know whether there were any rats at all in that country, but he had described them as about the size of dogs and terribly fierce. He was preparing a series of articles on the cockroaches of China, and asked Mr. Prime if he knew anything about them.

Our venerable friend of the Recorder will no doubt visit Beaufort on the 16th proximo, and we admonish him to reserve himself for something worth while: It has been a long time since the sandfidlers were well written up, and we feel sure it would be a pleasanter and more profitable job than the one in hand.

They went on joyful for about 100 yards when the heart of the intended bride failed her, and the bridegroom conducted her back to her father's house. After many entreaties he prevailed, and they set out again for the J. P.; but when about 50 yards on the road the bride's heart failed again, and back she went. After some time spent in remonstrances and coaxings the bridegroom got her to try it once more, and this time she broke down ten steps from her father's door. Back she went, declaring she would not get married to-day. The bridegroom now got wrothy, and demanded sundry presents he had made her for the occasion, and taking these emblems of what was to be the happiest day of his life, he went off to a distillery, and was cursing his luck in heavy draughts of whiskey. In the midst of his carousal messengers arrived informing him that the bride had relented and would now go. He returned with the wedding fixings—the bride put them on again, and this time went through, and it said they are now happy. The Asheville Citizen gives this as a true mountain story.

ANOTHER ROBBER BAND!—The crowd which attended the hanging of three of the Hillsboro rubber band, have barely had time to return to their homes when the Charlotte Observer announces the discovery of another band at Statesville, and names, as members of it, two young white men of respectable parentage, one of them a native of Ireland county, and one or two negroes. One of the white men has been arrested and is in jail. The other escaped.

Still another robber band has come to light within the last week, this time at Murfreesboro, Tenn.; and like these in our own State, composed of white men and negroes.

A correspondent of the Raleigh Observer of the 24th instant, in a well conceived article, by contrasting the educational facilities of the present time with those of thirty years ago, shows that whereas then, we had but one institution (the State University) worthy the name of a college, we now have Wake Forest, Trinity, and Davidson. N. C. College, at Mt. Pleasant, is also worthy of mention as indicating the advancement of educational interests in the State. Davidson has undoubtedly gained a reputation which places her in the fore front, and the correspondent alluded to, takes pains to show this fact.

To the exclusion of several contributions on the prohibition question, now become unwelcome reading to the general public, we present, at the earliest opportunity Gov. Vance's first speech in the U. S. Senate. The numerous friends of the Governor have confidently expected that whenever he attempted to speak he would have something worth saying, and say it in a manner creditable to himself and the State. They will not be disappointed in reading the speech we present in this paper.

Dr. J. H. Meares, of Philadelphia, is now successfully working the refractory sulphuretic gold ores (so common in this State) at a gold mine in Cabarrus county, by a patented process. If his invention is worth anything it is worth millions, for it has hitherto proved impossible to extract more than about 50 per cent of the gold in the ores of this class.

THE ELECTION.
On the Prohibition of the liquor traffic in the township petitioning for it, takes place on Thursday, the 5th of June.

The prohibition is a proper subject for the action of the people. If they believe the traffic is an evil which ought to be abated, it is conceded on all hands that they have the right to put it down. They cannot prevent men from drinking liquor. It is not expected that the suppression of the traffic will accomplish this entirely; but the prohibition of the traffic will remove it from public view, will take it from before the eyes of the young and put it under proscription as a dangerous, deadly evil, and relieve the consciences of citizens, who feel that they are responsible for the public sanction given the license system. It is undeniably a heavy tax on the industry of the country, often imposing oppressive burdens which fall most heavily on the industrious and orderly part of the people. If they are unwilling to bear these burdens any longer (having borne them all their lives) they have a right to throw them off, and we shall be glad to see them do it.

The latest mule story is remarkable: a man out in the gold digging of the West had a spite against a mule at the mine, and loaded a can with nitro glycerine and set it where he expected the mule to find and kick it. The mule did find the can, and after smelling of it, squared himself to kick it. But seeing he man who set it out for him some hundred feet off, skulking and getting out of the way, he changed his position, with his tail towards him, and then let fly. The can hit the man between his shoulders and exploded. The mule went on grazing, but the malicious miner disappeared in smoke and was never afterwards found even in scraps.

A man named Walker went over the Niagara falls on the 25th. It is said of him that he had during his life (of 30 years) saved the lives of 10 or 12 persons at the falls. On this occasion he was drinking, and as he was prone to do while in that condition, recklessly ventured out into the rapids above the falls in a boat. But this time he lost one of his ears, and with it his life. He cried for help when he saw his danger but was beyond the reach of help. In a little while he was dashed over the falls.

Talbot's new patent Spark-Arrestor is really the only perfect and reliable one, and is superseding all others in use. The great efficiency of this Arrestor is attracting universal attention, and is being endorsed by the best mechanical engineers and insurance companies. Its prominent features are: It does not destroy the draft. It does not interfere with cleaning the tubes. No plunger should be without one of them. It requires no direct dampers to be opened when raising steam (dampers being objectionable as they may be left open and allow sparks to escape). It requires no water to extinguish sparks, which, by condensation, destroys the draft. Besides, when water is used, if neglected, the efficiency is destroyed by evaporation of the water, and the boiler is kept in a filthy condition. It is simple and durable and can be relied upon. It can be attached to any boiler. No plunger should be without one of them. Insurance companies will insure gins and barn where the Talbot's Patent Spark-Arrestor is used at the same rates as for water or horse-power. Send for illustrated circulars and price list.
