ROWAN COUNTY.

Besides the old families already mentioned, who came to Rowan county at its first settlement, there were others who came after the war of the Revolution, and near the close of the century.

This family was descended from Samuel Henderson, of Hanover county, Virginia, whose ancestors were from Scotland, where the name of Henderson was conspicuous among the leaders in both civil and ecclesiastical affairs for several generations.

Samuel Henderson, married a Miss Williams, whose ancestors came from Wales. A son of this couple was the distinguished Colonial Judge, Richard Henderson, who came with his father to Granville county, North Carolina, in 1745.

Richard Henderson, for a year, and was then licensed with encomiums upon his talents and acquirements. He soon rose to the highest ranks of his profession. He was appointed a judge of the Superior Court, and sustained his dignified position with fidelity and honor during the exciting and dangerous period of the Revolution up to the time when the troubles of the country closed the courts of justice.

After an honorable and eventful career he closed his life in Granville county in 1785.

By his marriage with Elizabeth Keeling, he left a number of children, several of whom became citizens of Salisbury. His daughter, Fanny, as already mentioned, became the wife of Judge Meany. His son, Leonard, was distinguished for his knowledge of the law, and became Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of North Carolina.

But the son that became the honor and pride of Rowan was

HON. ARCHIBALD HENDERSON.

He was born in Granville county, Aug. 7th, 1768, and was educated in his native county, and studied law with his relative, Judge Williams. His father died about 1790, and soon rose to eminence in his profession, Judge Murphy, in 1827, said that he was the most perfect model of a lawyer that our bar had produced.

From an elaborate eulogy, written by Hon. A. D. Murphy, and found in Col. Wheeler's Sketches, we glean the following characteristics: "He was a man of great dignified character, and held himself above the petty passions and prejudices of men. He delighted in studying the constitution and jurisprudence of his country, and his knowledge assumed a scientific cast. He had great respect for authority, and gloried in the fact that he lived under a government of laws. When he entered a court of justice he felt his responsibility as an expounder of the law, and the guardian of the rights of his clients. To his associates at the bar he was courteous, and to the younger members of his profession he was especially kind and indulgent, rendering them aid when he could, in the management of their cases. His speeches were generally brief, pointed, and conclusive, and in great causes his eloquence was irresistible. He did not badger witnesses, as third rate lawyers are in the habit of doing, but was as polite and courteous to them as to the court. As he advanced in life he became more accustomed to interpret the laws by the rules of common sense, and lost reverence for artificial rules, being desirous to strip off the veil of mystery from every branch of the law, and root out all the remains of a ridiculous pedantry that so often makes the rules of justice unintelligible to the common mind."

It is related that in 1818, when the Legislature created the Supreme Court of North Carolina, that Archibald Henderson was spoken of as one of the Justices, along with John Lewis Taylor, and John Hall. Having an extensive and lucrative practice at the bar, and taking special delight in the active duties of an advocate, he went before the Legislature, of which he was a member, and courteously declined the honor, at the same time assuring them that his brother, Leonard Henderson, was better qualified for the duties and responsibilities of that office than himself, and that it would be more congenial to his tastes. The Legislature thereupon accepted his declination, and elected his brother in his stead.

Archibald Henderson represented his district in Congress from 1799 to 1803, and the Town of Salisbury three times in the General Assembly. He was married to Sarah Alexander, daughter of William Alexander, of Cabarrus, a grand daughter of Col. Moses Alexander, of Colonial times. Her mother, the Hon. Nathaniel Alexander, of Mecklenburg was elected Governor of North Carolina, in 1805, and is represented as a worthy member of a family yet fruitful in talent and patriotism. From this marriage of Archibald Henderson with Sarah Alexander, there sprang two children, the late Archibald Henderson, of Salisbury, and Jane Caroline, now Mrs. Judge Boyden.

Archibald Henderson, studied at Yale College and at the University of Virginia. Returning home, he settled in Rowan County. Possessed of an ample estate, and being of a quiet disposition, he did not feel the necessity, nor possess the disposition to enter into any of the active and stirring professions of life, but devoted his attention to reading and the management of his estate.

He served his fellow citizens as a magistrate and for awhile as a member of the Governor's Council. A staunch and intelligent democrat, his opinions had great weight with his political party.

His marriage, Miss Mary Steele Ferrand, a grand daughter of Gen. Steele, near Salisbury. His children were Lieut. Leonard Henderson, who was killed at the battle of Cold Harbor, in Virginia; John Steele Henderson, Esq., now a member of the Salisbury bar; Richard Henderson, a lieutenant in the U. S. Navy, now in active service, and Mary, during the life of Henderson died within the present year, 1880, and her remains were interred beside his father's grave in the Lutheran grave yard in Salisbury.

Jane C. Henderson, daughter of the Hon. Archibald Henderson, was first married to Dr. Luceo Mitchell, from the eastern part of the Carolina, during the siege of New Orleans, in the war of 1812, a fine physician and a courteous and public spirited gentleman. He was an old line whig, and took a prominent part in the political affairs of his day. After the death of Dr. Mitchell, his widow became the wife of the
