In February last the pyrotechnic establishment belong to Professor Samuel Jackson, at Chester, was destroyed and a number of lives lost, Since that time the owner of the il!fated place has devoted much time to learning the true cause of the explosion, and he believes that at last he has solved the mystery. In a small building attached to the factory proper was stored a number of stars made of a material known as blue light. It was this that detonated with such terrific force as to demolish the structure where they were stored. Professor Jackson yesterday told a Record reporter the result of his recent discoveries, which, he claims, will greatly benefit science and show that a new force has been found for blasting purposes which he believes even more powerful than nitroglycerine and hall again of the power of dynamite. "I have been making blue fire such as caused this explosion since 1844," said the professor, "and never knew it to explode, detonate or develop any extraordinary force unti last February. Up to within a shor time ago I was ignorant of the rea cause of the disaster, but happening to read in an English paper of an explosion in New Zealand which was exactly similar, and there being an Connects at Salisbury with R. & D.
