How to Walk with an Escort.

From the New York Ledger.

A great many girls seem to be very anxious to know just how to walk properly in the street with a gentleman escort. It is right and proper that girls should ask about these things, if they are not settled in their minds concerning them, and that they should be unwilling to do any thing that might not appear ladylike. Next to being in everything correct and proper comes the appearing so to others.

The etiquette with regard to the taking of the arm lies in a nut-shell. Common sense and the custom of the country govern it. Where, as in most American towns, a lady who takes a gentleman's arm in the daytime is supposed to be engaged to him, it should not be done by mere friends. In New York it is not done by any but husband and wife, or mother and son, as long as daylight lasts. The members of a large, mixed party walking out of town may always do it. The idea, in such a case, is that roads are rough, and ladies need support, and that parasols may be thus carried for them by their escorts. In the city, during a rain storm, most men of self-possession will at any hour offer an arm to a lady over whose head they are carrying an umbrella. The reason is obvious.

In the evening, after dark, no lady should ever walk with a gentleman in any city or town without taking his arm. This is so imperative, that if the gentleman is too ignorant to know his duty, or too bashful to offer his arm, the lady should signify that she is ready to take it, after walking a few moments. The fact that she has his arm, says to strangers: This gentleman has this lady under his protection. They are not merely strangers who have spoken to each other.

In going to any place of entertainment the lady should keep the gentleman's arm until the door of the auditorium is entered. Then she should drop it and let him precede her to her seat, which he will wait for her to enter first, he taking the outside place. This also is common sense, as you can see; it gives the gentleman the position of leader and protector, which he should always take in public. He should also, as a rule, always walk on the outside of the pavement, changing, if a turn alters his position, by passing behind the lady and then offering his other arm.

There is no familiarity in taking a gentleman's arm. There is nothing but respect implied by the offer of it It is a courtesy, and a proffer of polite service, and nothing to feel awkward about or conscious about, if the arm is taken properly, with one hand, not thrust too far past the gentleman's elbow.

The lover-like way of clasping both hands on the coat sleeve is only suitable for moonlight rambles in courting days, or for very gushing wives during the honey-moon.

As a general thing, if a gentleman of high social position and much experience of the world offers you his arm—we suppose you to be young and inexperienced—you may safely take it, for he will not do it unless he is sure that its correct under the peculiar circumstances.

In crossing a wide street, climbing over something, passing through a rough crowd, and in many positions which might by chance occur, you would be foolish to decline that crook of the elbow, even in broad day.

Under general circumstances one might say; Do not take a mere friend's arm by day. Always take an escort's arm after dark, out of doors, or in crossing a large room at a ball, party, or fair, and in going to supper.

A gentleman should never slip his hand through a lady's arm in walking in the street. Bashful young men sometimes do it through ignorance; but the lady should always politely signify that she prefers to take her escort's arm, if it is at a time when the arm should be taken at all.

What I telt you is for the present time and for the present American ideas. Should you go abroad you must notice what the most respectable persons do, or ask well-informed people about such matters, and learn as fast as you can.

Lesson for Boys.

Daniel Wedster once told a good story in a speech, and was asked where he got it. "I had it laid up in my head for fourteen years, and never got a chance to use it until today," said he.

My little friend wants to know what good it will do to learn the Rule of Three, or to commit a verse in the Bible. The answer is this: Some time you will need that very thing. Perhaps it may be twenty years before you can make it fit in just the right place, but it will be just in place some time. Then if you don't have it, you will be like the hunter who had no ball in his rifle when the bear met him."

"Twenty-five years ago my teacher made me study surveying," said a man who had lately lost his property, "and now I'm glad of it. It is just in place. I can get a good situation and high salary." The Bible is better than that; it will be in place as long as we live.

Frescoes.

The London Baptist pulishes the following from the "walls of a church in Lubeck." It is just such an appeal as we may all "read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest:"

You call me Master—and you do not ask my will.

You call me Light—and you see me not.

You call me the Road—and follow me not.

You call me Life—and you desire me not.

You call me Wise—and imitate me not.

You call me Good—and love me not.

You call me Rich and from me ask nothing.

You call me Eternal—and yet do not seek me.

You call me Merciful—but do not trust in me.

You call me Noble—and do not serve me.

You call me All-Powerful—and do not honor me.

You call me Just—and do not fear me.

When I condemn you, therefore, blame me not for it.

Telling the News.

News is not worth a cent, in fact is no news at all, until it is told to somebody. To share good news with others gives it half its charm, to the teller as well as the hearers.

The stage coach, full of passengers, was coming down the mountain; the driver with his foot on the breaks, and both hands full, holding back his wheel horses, when a shout was heard from a cabin away up on the side of the hill. "Hello! hold on there!" and a little fellow, bare headed and bare footed came tearing down the hill. With a powerful effort the driver stopped his team. The little chap climbed to the top of the fence, his face all ablaze with excitement—"Jest hold a minute; I've got somethin' to tell ye—our baby's got a tooth!"

The driver's remarks it is unnecessary to repeat; but the passengers were evidently highly delighted with the information.

Electric Lights—Ingenious Device.

A remarkable and eminently useful addition to the many contrivances for electric lighting has been placed before the public by the Portable Electric Light Company, of Boston. Their invention is called the Portable Electric Lighter, and it is nothing less than an electric table lamp. It requires no motive power, the light being produced by chemical action, and makes possible the banishment of matches from places where they can be reached by children and are constantly in danger of being the cause of disastrous fires. The apparatus occupies a space of but five square inches, and as its weight is only five pounds can be readily carried from room to room. It requires no wires or connection of any kind, for, by simply pressing upon a knob to the full extent of the spring which connects the battery, an electric current is produced by which the spiral of platinum is heated to incandescence and the light is instantaneous. Any portion of the apparatus can be replaced at small cost, and the material lasts about two months and can be renewed at a trifling expense by any chemist.—Baltimore Day.

The House-Fly.

The capacity of the common house-fly as a distributor of disease is beginning to attract the attention of the scientific. Dr. Thomas Taylor, of Washington, has published the result of some examinations which he has made on the subject, and the Popular Scientific Monthly, quoting him says:

"Considering the habits and habitat of the house-fly, it will appear evident that, should it prove to be a carrier of poisonous bodies, its power to distribute them in human habitations is greater than that of any other known insect. Under our system of public travel the common house-fly may be transported from one end of the continent to the other. It may feast to-day in the markets of Washington, and to-morrow in those of New York, and in like manner it may be transported from a hospital for contagious or infectious diseases to homes in the vicinity, or even in remote localities. It may also be taken from one hospital to another, or from one ward to another within the same hospital, and may plant the germs of disease in exposed wounds, or deposit them in food, or liberate them in the atmosphere breathed by patients afflicted with diseases of a different class."

This matter will doubtless receieve, as it ought, the more careful attention of the medical profession hereafter.

A Frightened Community.

The people of the town of Wilkesbarre, Pennsylvania, were thrown into a panic, last Thursday night, by the sudden sinking of the earth under one portion of the town, causing great chasms in the earth and rents in the walls. In that particular portion of the town the people fled from their houses, mothers carrying their children with them, out into the darkness and the streets in the bitter cold, not knowing whither to fly nor what to do. Until day dawned, and revealed the surroundings, the wildest confusion prevailed. It was fearfully cold to remain out of doors, yet they dared not enter the abandoned houses, for fear they might fall in ruins upon them.

It seems that an area of about forty acres under the town has been worked as a coal mine, the earth above being propped by wooden supports after the coal had been removed. The rotting of these props, it is supposed, caused the earth to settle and sink with the results mentioned. It is not known whether the danger is over, but as a number of miners have bravely volunteered to go down into the mine and explore it, the probabilities are that the cause will be discovered, and steps taken to prevent any more of these nocturnal shakes.

It is stated that there is great need in Georgia of a barrel factory capable of supplying the State with the barrels needed for the syrup crop. The present yield is enormous, and the syrup makers find great difficulty in getting the barrels for storage.

A Mississippi man has discovered that an excellent quality of sugar can be made from sweet potatoes. If this proves true, a new use has been found for one of the best and most prolific of American products.

W. H. Gilmore, editor of the Shiloh Review, Ohio, closes his very interesting letters of his trip through the South as follows:

"Our whole trip, as a body, through the South was a perfect continuation of attentions and kindnesses, and shall not soon be forgotten. And especially was this the case in Florida. We have arrived at this conclusion, that the 'Confederate Brigadier's are not as bad a set of people as some of our Northern politians try to make out they are."

The foundation of all happiness, temporal and eternal, is reliance on the goodness of God.

When you recieve a favor you ought never to forget it; when you do one you ough not to remember it.

Honorable industry travels the same road with duty; and Providence has closely linked both with happiness.

God is a sure paymaster. He may not pay at the end of the week, month, or year; but remember he pays at the end.
