In warm blooded animals the heart's action ceases in a very few minutes after the destruction of the nervous centres, or after the circulation of the blood in its own vessels is by any means arrested. Not so with cold blooded animals, however, as the heart of one of them may continue to beat for many hours after it has been emptied of blood, and even after it has been cut out of the chest. The pulsations of the heart of an eel have been seen to continue for six hours after separation from the rest of the body; of a torpedo, nine hours; and of a salmon, for twenty-four hours.
