How Mackay, the Bonanza Man, Hired King to Dance at $1,000 an Hour.

Carson Appeal.

The round of amusements which Mr Mackay is providing for the American colony since his return to Paris from the great fetes at Moscow are the all-eclipsing topic of the hour. At the ball given last Saturday, as our special cable cor respondent reports, Mr. Mackay hired the King of Sweden to dance with the American ladies, paying him $1,000 an hour for the work. About midnight he struck for higher wages and Mr. Mackay stood the raise with true American sang froid. By 4 o'clock the King was completely blown with his social exercises and taken from the room in a fainting condition. Mr. Mackay offered to pay all his funeral expenses if he died, which generous offer made him many friends among the Swedes. The Prince of Wales telegraphed for an invitation to the ball, that Wales Consolidated was a good deal short declined to issue an invite. When his little bon mot was translated in the morning journals the city was convulsed with laughter. Several descendants of the Bonaparte family who attempted to climb in the windows of the ball room were thrown into the basin of the fountain by Mr. Mackay, who stands over six feet in his socks and is called the "strong man of Nevada." Although Mr. Mackay danced until daylight and went off shift at six o'clock, he whipped two editors of the royalist faction before breakfast for publishing an incorrect description of some of the dresses worn at the blowout. When the bodies of the editors were borne away in an ambulance to the Hospital des Invalides the crowds applauded in the streets. If appearances are to be relied upon no party of excursionists ever enjoyed a day more in any place than the Pennsylvanians did in Charlotte Sunday. Yesterday morning they resumed their car, and under the charge of Mr. Patrick and Mr. K. S. Finch, who went along to point out the country to them, left for Shelby. They will remain in that section until Wednesday, when they will return through Charlotte on their way home. - Journal - Ob.
