The Pleasure of Coasting.

See the boy
Full of joy
With his painted sled,
Gayly go
Through the snow,
Always at the head.
Bells jingle,
Ears tingle,
But what matters that?
Rubs 'em warm,
Doesn't harm,
Though he tumbles flat.
Up again,
With a grin,
He's bound to have his frolic;
Slipping down,
Cracking crown,
'Sno worse than having colic.

The Inevitable Thorn.

She had such pretty bright blue eyes,
And waving hair of golden sleek;
A saucy nose and cherry lips,
And stately manners of a queen.
But oh, there was one little fault,
One blemish all these charms among;
This lovely rosebud had one thorn,
She had—also! she had it tongue.

The Greely Rescue.

In describing the rescue of Lieutenant Greely to a reporter, a sailor of the rescuing vessel Bear recently gave the following version:
"At Littleton Island, the entrance of Smith's Sound, we were nipped in the ice three days. The Bear and Thetis sailed from there to Cape Sabine, on the extreme point of which records of the Greely party were found by an ensign of the Thetis. The Bear started at once for Cocked Hat Cove, where Greely was as indicated by the message. The steam launch under Lieutenant Colwell made the landing. A figure was seen advancing over the ice.
"Who are you?" said Chief Engineer Low.
"I am Sergeant Long," said the emaciated wretch.
"Is Greely alive?" was the next question.
"Yes, but starving. For God's sake give me something to eat."
"We took the man on board the Bear at once. Commander Schley and Dr. Ames landed as soon as possible with medical supplies. The party was found in a dilapidated tent, lying in their sleeping bags, unable to stand upon their feet, which were useless. They were so weak and emaciated that they were literally nothing but human skeletons wrapped in skin. Greely was reading from a prayer-book to private Cornell, who was supposed to be dying. As soon as he knew that it was an American expedition that had rescued him Greely said: 'I am glad to see you.' Dr. Ames took charge of the party and allowed nothing to be given them but a small teaspoonful of brandy punch at intervals and at last small quantities of food. The living and the dead were removed aboard the vessels as soon as possible. All but six bodies were recovered. They were wrapped in sheeting and covered with alcohol in tanks. We stayed at Cape Sabine only eleven hours and returned through Melville Bay as fast as the ice would allow.
"One of our Esquimaux went crazy here, and, jumping on the ice, ran off as fast as his legs could carry him. Two sailors were detailed to follow and bring him back. Such running you never saw. When they captured him he turned up his toes like a turtle, expecting to be carried. But tars didn't look at it that way. They punched him with their boarding pikes until he was glad to trot back to the ship. We arrived at St. John's, Newfoundland, July 16, where the iron coffins were received and the bodies placed in them."

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND.

Raleigh News and Observer.

The last step in the election of President Cleveland was taken yesterday, when the votes of the electoral college were counted in the joint session of the houses of Congress. The announcement of the result, made by Mr. Edmunds, the president of the Senate, raised a storm in both chambers, but we think unnecessarily. It would seem that under the law he did all that was required; that he did more than was necessary signifies only that he wished to emphasize the uncertainties of the existing law. He caused the certificates to be opened and the votes to be counted. The result he mentioned as a public matter, but not assuming to himself the prerogative of declaring who was elected. Nowhere is the duty imposed on the president of the Senate to declare who is elected President, and he has no such high and dangerous function. He announced the result of the voting, and the constitution makes the declaration as to who shall be President.

The clause reads:

"The President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates, and the votes shall then be counted; the person having the greatest number of votes for President shall be the President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of electors appointed."

Such is the constitution.

The statute of 1792 provides that "the certificates shall then be opened, the votes counted, and the persons to fill the offices of President and Vice President ascertained and declared agreeable to the constitution." Here there is an apparent authorization for a declaration, but the declaration must be "agreeable to the constitution."

The constitution does not impose this duty on the Vice President, and Mr. Edmunds only gave point to the uncertainty by declaring that he did not have any funtion to perform in that matter.

But it is not material.

Grover Cleveland is now the ascertained President of the United States for the term beginning March 4, 1885, and that is all of practical import to the people.

That which so many weak kneed followers of the Democratic camp have so constantly prophesied would never occur has occurred.

"The dead Democracy," which these half-hearted folk have so often consigned to the graveyard, rises triumphant, conquering all adversaries, and hails the President-elect of the United States as he bears aloft the banner of those victorious legions that have never wavered in its cause or quailed before its enemies.

North Carolina at New Orleans.

N. Y. Evening Post, (Jan. 30).

In the government building probably the most perfect display is made by North Carolina. This State was one of the first of the Confederacy to recover from the effects of the civil war, and has had, therefore, a longer lease of new life than other States who underwent a lengthened paralysis. Her Legislature wisely set aside a portion of her revenues to exposition work, so when she went to Boston in 1883, she offered a display that no State had ever equalled. With this experience, and with additional appropriations, she came to New Orleans and has covered herself with glory. There are, doubtless, States richer in every respect; there are those which could show more highly developed manufactures or richer soil; but there is no State that has shown such a consummate mastery of the art of exhibition. With every article that she could produce properly classified and displayed, she makes an effect far superior to that of States which have greater natural advantages.

Be Systematic.

No great work was ever accomplished without system. Did you ever stop to consider how much time is lost in this world for lack of system. A house-keeper will for lack of system fool away the morning hours, and dinner time comes before the breakfast dishes are washed, simply because half a dozen things are under way at the same time, and no one thing accomplished. You sometimes ask a young man whom you know ought to have plenty of leisure, why he did not do such and such a thing, only to be answered: "I didn't have time" Why did he not have time? He was idling with a few friends, maybe, telling stories, or what may be worse, doing nothing, and before he is aware of it his spare time was up—it had been wasted. You have no idea how much work can be accomplished in a day if there is only system and application. A few moment's work at a certain time each day on some special object will accomplish that object before the worker is fairly aware of it, and at the same time will not interfere with the regular duties of the hour. Every moment is precious, and under some systematic plan can be utilized for business or pleasure. The merchant who does business in a shipshod way is not the man who succeeds. The mechanic who only works to kill time, and lacks system in what he does is the one who always plods along in the same old rut. No matter how hard may be your work it can be made much easier by taking advantage of every minute of time and systematizing your operations according to the time you have and the work on hand. You can't let up on a job begun without danger of complicating affairs and increasing your work. You can't attend to half a dozen different things at the same time without slighting all of them. The only sure plan of success in life is to systematize your every action so that every move counts toward the object you would accomplish.

Too Much Unproductive Land.

Petersburg, Va., Index.

One grand error of the Southern farmer is the holding on to so much unproductive land. Most farmers, we dare say might, in some way make productive more land than they do. We say, in some way, either by tillage, by pasturage, by fruit, nut or timber culture, or by tenantry. But where a man has fairly done what he can, according to his means and labor force, he has no need for more, and should not keep it if he has it.

The secret of successful farming every where is to make the whole farm productive. Every square yard of soil should yield its quota to help fill the farmer's bin and barn. Land that yields no income, and is not likely to do so even in the life time of the owner, is a dead weight, drawing upon the rest of the farm in taxes, interest, etc., and fearfully curtails the profits of the productive acres.

This error is far worse when much of the unproductive ground of the land lies within the enclosed portions. There then is an additional annual tax for fencing, ground travelled over in working, &c. The rule should be to make every foot of an enclosed or cultivated field productive. There should be no waste ground on account of stumps, stones, trees or other impediments. An idle square yard of ground not only cuts down the general average, but is an expense on the labor bestowed upon the rest.

The hillsides, fence corners, meadow ground and woodland of every farm can and should in some way be made to yield something in the general routine. The departments of rural industry are multitudinous—something for every soil, locality, season and market. The true policy is, to make every acre do something. If there are more acres than can be worked, some should be sold.

Asheboro Courier: A few days ago

Joseph Hackett, near Red Cross, shot at a bird on his hay stack. He killed the bird but did not notice that he set his hay on fire. The consequence was he lost his hay and nearly all his provender and his barn barely escaped.—On Wednesday night of last week, Mr. Eli Welch who lives in the Concord settlement in this county was awakened by a man, standing at the head of his bed with one hand on his pillow and a pistol in the other. The robber told him to keep quiet, that he only wanted his money. Upon being assured by both Mr. and Mrs. Welch they had no money, he departed. On the same night, Mr. Esie Yates, who lives about two miles from Mr. Welch's, awoke to find a man standing in his bed room examining his pants. The thief was saluted with the contents of a shot gun but succeeded in escaping with $10 in cash.

BLOCKADED MAILS.—Chicago, Feb. 11.

As the result of the blizzard the dispatching room of the post office and the large covered platform, at which the mails are loaded on wagons are filled with huge piles of mail pouches containing letters and cloth sacks filled with papers. Every mail car in the depots is crowded with mail, so that it cannot take more. The amount of mail thus delayed weighs probably from 80 to 100 tons and nearly all of it originates in Chicago. When the roads are open the work of postal employees in all branches of the service will be extremely heavy. There are now still out ninety direct mails which are past due in Chicago and on which 500 pouches may be expected. The mail transfer contractor is suffering badly on account of delays, as he is obliged to send wagons to each train to go out and also to keep a wagon at each of the depots to receive incoming mails.

A SENSIBLE VIEW.—The Philadelphia Times says:

A youth who is old enough to carry a pistol is old enough to know that it is loaded, and old enough also to be held responsible for the consequences of exploding it. When a pistol or gun, aimed in the sportive way so familiar, has gone off and killed the person aimed at, the joker is plunged in misery and there is a general feeling that the sense of the mischief he has done must be sufficient punishment. No doubt it is so, but it is not so much for the sake of punishing the individuals as to hold up a warning to other careless persons that these reckless jokers should be made to feel the rigor of the law.

The value of the coconut as a food is as yet but little understood. An instance of its use is found in the experience of two shipwrecked sailors. They were seven years on an island where their only food was coconuts and an occasional flying fish. They retained good health, and gained in weight.
