DOGMATIC (?) SHEEP LORE.

According to a Tennessee statistician, dogs, which consume every year food enough to make 30,000,000 pounds of bacon and feed 100,000 able-bodied men, to say nothing of preventing farmers from keeping 2,000,000 sheep. - Exchange.

We ask intelligent readers to reflect upon those figures Tennessee is not very much larger in population than North Carolina. If the figures given are approximately correct, what a curse and burden to the State are those useless, worthless canines? North Carolina fares but little better than her daughter. What can be done to get rid of the consuming nuisance? Have the farmers no appreciation of facts? Will legislators forever be afraid to do their duty? Must sheep husbandry be forbidden instead of being nurtured !- Wil. Star.

The Star is perfectly conversant with the fact that most people read for amuse ment and not with a view of applying knowledge gained. Especially is this so with the laboring classes. They toil hard all day, read but little at night, before retiring, if indeed they read at all. Sundays are devoted to reading and this i supplemented by rainy days. It is natural enough that such readers should only care to be entertained or amused. Every farmer will read the above item, pat the head of a yaller hound while he reads it out to the family and actually wonder how they do manage to get along in Tennessee with all them dogs. There are dogs of service, but they are very scarce in this State. The great majority of the dog property of the State is absolutely worthless-this is true of nineteen-twentieths of the canines.

Writing of dogs recalls to the writer that he saw Dr. C. W. Dabney, State Chemist, recently with a splendid specimen of the therough bred Shepherd dog. It was a puppy, not quite grown, and the Doctor, who is keenly alive to every interest, no matter how small, so it tends to the upbuilding of some industry in the State, said: "I tell you, sir, this dog is about the only hope left to the sheep interests of the State." The Legislature will never give the sheep raiser any relief from the ceaseless ravages of dogs on their flocks. The legislators all own dogs and so do their constituents at home. Dog is not the text the young and budding politician takes when he climbs the stump and looks into the faces of sovereigns. Not much! He dare not kick a friendless cur in the road. But to resume, Dr. Dabuey said that "this dog, when well trained, with the assistance of an old man, (or one disabled from manual labor on the farm,) was sufficient for the ample protection of at least 300 sheep. The dog will keep them herded, take them to and from the terest." sheep fold and guard them; giving the alarm to the man in charge. It is a useful

In the first place remember that crops are good everywhere, and that prices are going to be low for everything. Now that it is understood that these products are to be cheap from the excessive abundance of crops all ever the country, it behooves the farmer to make the best of the situation. WHISKY IN CAMP.

There has been a good deal of corres pondence and newspaper comment, in al parts of the State, relative to the recent encampment of the State Guard.

First, the press was indiguant over "General Order No. 5," known as the 'gush order." If the camp had been deserted instantly on the reading of this order, no surprise would have been felt in the State. It would have been cause justifiable. Next, the Guard, or part of it, are indignant over "General Order No. 7," the reprimanding and disbanding document which was occasioned by the premature abandonment of camp without orders from headquarters, by certain of the forces. This has occasioned much bitterness among the soldiers. Then the pro and con of the awarding of the prizes has come in for a for a share of public attention. Now the discussion of the blue and gray is waxing warm. The soldiers who wear the blue don't like it because the ladies prefer and delight in the gray. while the boys in gray are proud of the preference, and so the wrangling goes on. While all these things are feeding the wonderment of the people, other important auxiliary facts are coming slowly to the front, and they are facts which come ladened with the perfume of "distilled in-

Washington Letter.

[From Our Regular Correspondent.] WASHINGTON, Aug. 22, 1885.

Washington is very quiet now. The President is in the woods, the Cabinet is scattered, and the clerks are running the well regulated Government Machine. The usual flocks of tourists and a fair sprinkling of gawky bridal couples fill in the street and department panoramas. Hundreds of Washingtonians are off at the springs or the sea shore. They will begin to return in a week or two, and, by the middle of September, it is expected that the President will arrive with a string of fish. Then the industry of office seeking will begin to hum, and, by the first of December, when Congress arrives, its annual shaking up, and will attract be exciting from conflicts in the Capitol and White House and from growing antagonism between the two. As long er, &c. ago as 1826 the father of the present Emperor, five years before his abdication, made a treaty with England for the abolition of the slave trade, which was extensively carried on before that time. Twenty years ago Dom Pedro II. gave freedom to the slaves of the government, and fourteen years ago the Legislature provided for the gradual emancipation of all slaves in the Empire. From that date to this the question has been more or less in dispute. At times feeling has run high--quite as high as it ever did in this country. The end is near at hand.
