To Jefferson Davis.

And they gather, gather, gather,

Like the foeman to the fray.

Only the snow white lillies

They come with flaunting banners,

Of peace-and wondrous fair.

Then look on those who love thee,

Who gather round thee now,

And read aright the written line

Look! and thy heart grows strong

And proud-for thine eyes can see

They're one-and one with thee.

With loving hearts they silent wait,

Of the peace which comes with morning

For they shall live, they shall not die-

Leonainie.

Montgomery Advertiser.

Such mem'ries have no graves.

Emblazoned on each brow.

No traitor in the seried ranks,

For all have learned it well,

Thy voice to break the spell.

Then speak of strife that's ended,

Of the parted who are one,

And sets not with the sun.

The glory of our braves.

Up to the sky above us.

Up to the nearest star,

Leonainie, angels named her,

And they made her hair of gloomy

Moonshine, and they brought her to me

And they took the light

In a smile of white;

In a solemn night;

Would we raise our lofty spire

To the Heroes of our war.

And speak of precious mem'ries.

No need to tell the story,

But no blood-red cross is there,
