Probably the most gigantic engineering enterprise of modern times is the ship canal, now in course of construction across the Isthmus of Panama. Among the many difficulties to be overcome are those of taking the canal through the Chagres river some twenty times, through a hill several hundred feet high by means of deep cutting, and through numerous swamps and beds of rock. Twenty miles of this canal are now so far finished as to admit water, three miles having a depth of twenty-five feet and the remaining seventeen a depth of eight feet,

When completed the largest steamers and vessels will be able to go through it, from one ocean to the other and will thus save unioning and overland transportation across the isthmus, or a long and dangerous voyage around Cape
